The music theme continues with Prince's appearances at both Marvel and DC, a DC rock 'n' roll quiz, and Lois Lane's duet with Pat Boone.

Hum a few bars, and I'll fake it

Comics characters have tangled with the world of music for decades. Chances are excellent that you're too young to remember The Happiness Boys (Ernest Hare and Billy Jones) singing "Barney Google with the Goo-Goo-Googly Eyes" in 1923. Many comics readers of today are too young to recall The Hollywood Argyles' "Alley Oop" from 1960.

But comics' association with music seems to be an ongoing one, starting decades ago and continuing to today. Clare Briggs, for example, lived from 1875 until 1930 and wrote and drew many strips and single-panel series, including When a Feller Needs a Friend. This 1919 sheet music, inspired by that series and its film spin-off ("English Theatre and Music Hall rights strictly reserved"), notes that versions "can also be had for your phonograph or player piano."

But it wasn't long ago that the Crash Test Dummies provided "Superman's Song" (in which they contrasted him to Tarzan). My music-critic son cites Our Lady Peace's "Superman's Dead" as another music-connected Superman number, albeit "a loathesome, screechy rock song." Popular music references to comics occur often enough that comics-associated lyrics are cited in CBG's letters column,, as readers come across such gems as Shel Silverstein's "Lemme Be Something" line "If I can't be your Human Torch, can I be your Sub-Mariner?"

There was a Krazy Kat ballet decades ago, and eventually Popeye, Annie, Peanuts, Desert Peach, Sylvia, Doonesbury, and Li'l Abner provided other musical diversions. Pogo starred in animated material, a half-hour done by Chuck Jones and a feature film in stop-motion. And, of course, there was an entire Songs of the Pogo LP — which included two songs performed by Walt Kelly, himself, in addition to Kelly-written songs performed by others.

My memories of another comics theatrical treat were awakened by Patrick Daniel O'Neill's article in this issue. My thoughts went back to July 1966, when husband Don and I imposed on Dick and Pat Lupoff and stayed in their New York City apartment. That was not only the summer of It's a Bird, It's a Plane, It's Superman. The Superman musical had shut down just before our trip — so the kind Lupoffs suggested the substitution of the Off-Broadway The Mad Show. How could anyone do a show based on Mad? By hiring talented writers and providing such outstanding comedians as Paul Sand, JoAnne Worley, and Richard Libertini— so the show contained more satirical comedy skits than musical numbers. But it succesfully brought the comics magazine to a different format.

By the '90s, comics and movies provided natural bonding, and such entertainments as Robert Crumb's Cheap Suit Serenaders seemed a matter of course — and Kitchen Sink produced a fancy comics-format book on The Grateful Dead. In the early '90s, Sony even tried tried packaging a Marvel comic book with some CDs: Entombed did Wolverine Blues, and Alice Cooper did a similar project. While no CBG theme issue will pretend to exhaust its topic, it's especially clear there's not enough room to cover comics-associated music in a single issue.

So we hope you'll come up with more in the letters column. "Oh, that reminds me!" you may say — and go on to discuss Shadowhawk: The Secret Revealed. Or Bullets' Cruisin'. Or The Kinks' "Wish I Could Fly like Superman." Or A Wolfrider's Reflections. Or Jim Croce's ...

Comics struggle to work in concert with music stores

ASSIGNMENT: COMICS
by Michael Dean

As art forms, music and comic books might not seem to have much in common. (Comic books don't have soundtracks, after all.) But the two actually have a long history together (see elsewhere in this issue for examples) and, what's more important from a marketing standpoint, they share much the same young-adult demographic. Comics shops and music shops may be separate places, but many of the same people can be seen frequenting them. Such music magazines as Reflex and Uncut have regularly carried features on comic books, while Heavy Metal for a long time carried news of cutting-edge recording artists along with its comics material.

Not surprisingly, then, some music shops have identified comic books as a product worth carrying, and some publishers have seen music shops as a venue for introducing comic books to a broader audience.

Thomas Conboy, Marvel's manager of newsstand sales for the mass market, named Tower Records as a music outlet that is particularly friendly to comics and comics-related products. The Chicago Tower Records, for example, sells Kitchen Sink's Crumb-inspired Devil Girl candy bar and an eccentric line of comic books, ranging from imported Japanese manga to obscure graphic novels.

Re-Visionary Comics Managing Editor Jay Allen Sanford told CBG, "Strangely enough, Tower Records carries adult comics as much as it does music comics," which makes the store a primary target for Re-Visionary, which publishes both adults-only and music-themed comics.

Though Re-Visionary has not produced any new issues of Rock 'n' Roll Comics in years, it maintains a strong backstock. "Kiss still sells well," said Sanford. "Also Sex Pistols and Nirvana. These are comic books that will stay in print as long as there's a demand for information about these groups."

Sanford said Re-Visionary markets its music backstock through ads in such music-collecting periodicals as Goldmine.

It was Re-Visionary's music line, not its adults-only line, that landed it in court and got it bounced from Capital City Distribution's solicitation catalogs. "We were pulled from the direct market by Capital because of a lawsuit against an unauthorized biography comic. After that it wouldn't carry any unauthorized biographies."

This was a problem for Re-Visionary, since virtually all its biographical comics about music, sports, and sex-industry personalities were unauthorized. "We did some authorized titles, but they're extremely messy projects," said Sanford. "So many people have their fingers in the pie."

Unauthorized biographies are commonplace in bookstores and are generally protected. Re-Visionary was hit with a lawsuit by New Kids on the Block, however, because it used the New Kids' trademarked logo. In ruling on the case, Judge John S Rhoades said, "While subjects of biographies may be offended, they can have no claim for trademark infringement. In this case, the First Amendment trumps any claim that the plaintiffs have for trademark infringement."

Re-Visionary has since returned to the direct market, but the majority of its sales continue to be through music shops and other outlets outside the traditional comics-shop network.

Millennium, 'Da'kota' creator in legal dispute

A judgment in the amount of $2,134.76 has been entered against Millennium Publications in Wisconsin Circuit Court in response to a claim by Da'kota creator Terry Pavlet. Pavlet had filed suit against Millennium to obtain money which he said was owed him as his share of the profits from the first two issues of Da'kota, as well as reimbursement of expenses.

According to Millennium Publisher Paul Davis, Da'kota #1 and #2 were published at a loss to Millennium in 1996 and 1997, before Pavlet and his TerryBear Studios withdrew the property in August 1997. Davis responded, "Almost all of the invoices, fees, and costs [cited in the claim] — never approved by our company — contain vague and unspecific claims. Our conclusion is that of all of the invoices submitted by Mr. Pavlet, only $120 is a legitimate claim. However, Mr. Pavlet also owes us $740 for the massive amount of work we performed to make his book, Da'kota, salable."

Millennium did not appear at the hearing, which was held in Pavlet's state, rather than in the company's home base of Rhode Island. Instead, it sent a counter-offer to repay Pavlet in unsold copies of Da'kota #1 and #2, which was rejected.

Pavlet told CBG that Millennium has not made any payments on the judgment. He said he plans to self-publish Da'kota in the near future.

MARVEL WATCH

This week in the battle for control of Marvel Comics: The May 25 Business Week reported a source close to Mattel said the toy company is working with Sony Corp. to buy out Marvel Entertainment, but Mattel has made no official comment. Meanwhile, Marvel trustee John Gibbons announced May 15 that he had arranged for the sale of Fleer's confection business, producer of Dubble Bubble Gum and Razzles.

X-O Manowar, Faith figures canceled

Steven Zyskowski

Skybolt Toyz has canceled all orders for its Faith action figure (based on the Lightning Comics character of the same name) and the X-O Manowar action figure (based on the Acclaim Comics super-hero). Skybolt said each product was canceled due to poor sales performance, with each figure drawing orders of between 6,000 and 7,000, less than half of what the company usually reports.

Skybolt spokespersons speculated that the Faith action figure may have been received a weak response from retailers because it is based on a lesser-known comic-book character. The company attributed low orders for the X-O Manowar action figure to low retailer confidence in the character's future in the wake of recent cutbacks in Acclaim's comics line.

Skybolt Vice President Steven Zyskowski said, "The competition for action-figure sales in the direct market is becoming fierce. There are new toy manufacturers and an increased number of products popping up every month. As a result, retailers and collectors are spending less money on any one given project, even though they may be spending more overall every month on combined new action-figure products. In terms of future products, Skybolt is focusing its energy on the value of the licensed mark. It's the only real factor that will separate one property from the next, as action figures featuring quality and detail have become the norm instead of the exception."

Skybolt will continue with its Girls of Chiodo Figure Set series, which it said has generated strong orders. Skybolt also said the Light Up Eyes Hellina, Letha, and Cynder action figures are all on schedule.

Marvel characters star in pop-up promotion

Paper figures of Spider-Man, The Hulk, and The Silver Surfer pop up to tell consumers of Farley's Dinosaurs Fruit Snacks whether the player has won the product's tie-in promotional "Marvel Super Hero Pop-Up Instant Win" game..

The grand prize winner gets a weekend trip for four to Universal Studios in California with dinner at Marvel Mania restaurant.

A total of 10 first prize winners get a Marvel super-hero sports pack, including a Spider-Man Huffy bike, a Spider-Man mini-basketball, a Hulk Jr. football, a Silver Surfer skateboard, a Hulk "power squeez" ball, and a Wolverine boogie board.

Second prize (500 of them) and third prize (5,000) winners receive a Spider-Man baseball cap and a free box of Farley's fruit snacks, respectively.

Losers can console themselves by collecting all three pop-up figures and using them to play the "Marvel Super-Hero Biathlon Game" inside the box.

An enraged but still polite Hulk gently breaks the news to a loser of the "Marvel Super Hero Pop-Up Instant Win" game on boxes of Farley's Dinosaurs Fruit Snacks.

'I Go Pogo' gets stage musical treatment

By Scott E. Green

This summer, the public will get its first look at a musical based on Walt Kelly's comic-strip collection I Go Pogo in a stage reading by the Community Players of Concord, N.H.

The musical, which is still in progress, was written by Doug Schwarz of Pennacook, N.H., a journalist and columnist whose work has appeared in both local and national newspapers. Schwarz told CBG, "I have always been a Pogo fan and I guess I get this from my folks who were also Pogo fans. I have also been a comic-book collector and actively collect X-Men titles."

Schwarz said the Kelly family had given him full support and permission to do the stage musical adaptation of the strip collection, which had previously been adapted for a Claymation film. "The musical adaptation is faithful to the storyline and characters, except that I have added a new character who is based on contemporary headlines and is named Newt," he said.

Schwarz described the music as an original hodgepodge of country, blues, and political jingles. "The musical has not seen its final form, and the stage reading should determine what gets added to the play and what gets dropped," said Schwarz. "I have already had one expression of interest from a local producer but you really do not know what can happen."

For information about future productions of I Go Pogo, Schwarz can be reached at (603) 753-8461.

Health problems keep Rex Miller in hospital

Rex Miller, a longtime dealer in super-hero-related and other collector's items, remains in the hospital following an April 20 stroke, which was reported in CBG #1279. According to a friend of the family, Miller is on dialysis, and it is not known when he will be able to leave the hospital. All auction activity by Miller is on hold until further notice.

Pulido, Palmiotti to attend Big Apple Con

Big Apple Con's final monthly event before taking a break for the summer is scheduled for June 6 at St. Paul Church at 9th Ave. and 60th St. in New York City.

Guests include the artists of the recent Lois Lane one-shot Amanda Conner and Jimmy Palmiotti, Chaos creators Brian Pulido and Steven Hughes, as well as Dave and Paty Cockrum, Rudy Nebres, Mark Bode, and Dan Parsons. Other publishers scheduled to attend include Crusade, Archie, Crucial, and Dark Angel Productions.

Lyman Daly returns to teach life drawing classes, and Friends of Lulu will conduct an artist/writer's workshop. The Comic Book Legal Defense Fund will take up a collection to bail Pulido out of "jail." Kids under 12 will receive free Sonic the Hedgehog sketches by Ken Penders. Admission is $6 for the day.

The deadline for Big Apple's "Create a Comic Book, We'll Publish It" contest has been extended until Sept. 11, the date of the following Big Apple con. SOMETHING HAS TO BE A SURPRISE!!

Nolan moves to Monster Island

With the shakeups in the Bat-books coming early next year, Detective Comics artist Graham Nolan was left with some time on his hands. What to do? Dust off that creator-owned dream project, of course.

Nolan will write, pencil, and ink the 48-page, black-and-white Monster Island scheduled to ship in November from his own Compass Comics.

"Like a lot of people in my generation, I grew up watching Creature Feature on Saturdays and just fell in love with monsters," Nolan said. "This one-shot will be high action-adventure in that tradition.

"It will be about two naval aviators who crash-land on Monster Island, an inter-dimensional repository for trouble-causing monsters run by aliens called The Gooch. It will hearken back to the days of lying on your stomach in front of the television watching those great monster movies."

But Nolan isn't leaving mainstream super-heroes forever. He's also teaming (as co-writer and artist) with his Detective pal Chuck Dixon for the prestige one-shot Superman: The Odyssey.

"It's the story of what happened to Clark Kent when he traveled around the world as a young man," Nolan said. "We'll see the Clark who doesn't yet realize he's an alien trying to humanize himself and fit in with people.

"This is in direct contrast, by the way, to Bruce Wayne (who makes a brief appearance in the comic book), who traveled the world to disconnect himself from his humanity and make himself an unstoppable crime-fighting machine. After drawing Bruce in the Batcave for so long, it feels good to stretch my creative muscles a bit."

Coney makes Vampi see red

Irishman and relative newcomer Mal (The Darkness) Coney has been tapped to follow in the footsteps of Grant Morrison and Mark Millar on the monthly Vampirella comic book, wrapping up its first year with the tentatively titled, three-part "Blood Red Epiphany" running through issues #10-#12.

Originally, Coney said he had wanted to stay on the title for a year but found he had over-committed himself slightly and could only handle three issues of the monthly. For Coney, following in the footsteps of Morrison and Millar is a daunting task. "Hopefully, whatever story resolution we bring to the end of the first year will satisfy the readers who were carried along by the incredible momentum of Grant and Mark's work," Coney said. "To come in at the end is quite a challenge. It's as if Mark and Grant were writing with acetylene torches, and now everyone is looking at me to continue."

While Coney's plans are still jelling, he did reveal that his arc will feature the return of Von Kriest, as well as the discovery of the Heart of Draculon, a portal that links Earth to Vampirella's homeworld, forcing Vampirella to fight to prevent the two cultures from meeting.

In other Vampirella news, #9 will be Amanda Conner's last issue of Vampirella for the foreseeable future, as she moves to Marvel on a yet-unrevealed Marvel Knights project.

McGuiness, Casey: High hopes for Hulk

In the recent game of creative musical chairs Incredible Hulk has become, former Deadpool and Fighting American artist Ed McGuiness has signed on to pencil #470-471.

McGuiness will join Joe Casey for the two issues, and, according to Casey, both he and McGuiness wouldn't mind staying around on the title for a long, long time.

"If Ed and I end up staying on the Hulk, look out, because I've got some outrageous stuff in mind," promised Casey. "Peter David's run on the book is a force of its own. How do I follow that? Well, all I can do is crank up the volume, and Ed's the perfect artist for the stories I've got in mind. So our fingers are crossed as to whether or not we'll keep on beyond #471."

For a sneak peek at the creative duo, check out the lead-in story of Cable #58, shipping in July.

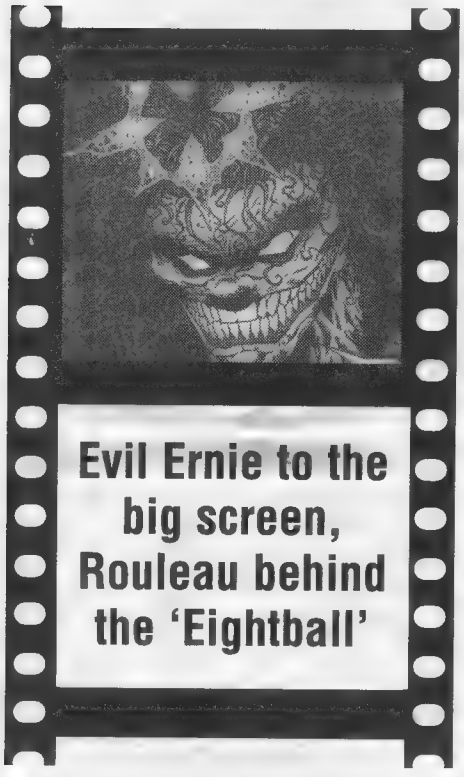
MASS O' MEDIA

By Matt Brady



Evil Ernie takes Hollywood. Chaos Comics President Brian Pulido recently confirmed that Chaos is currently in talks with entertainment attorney John Frankenheimer of the Loeb and Lobe development company to produce an Evil Ernie feature film. "We're really excited to be with Loeb and Lobe, who packaged among other things, Pulp Fiction and represent Quentin Tarantino," Pulido said. "We're shopping the project to numerous studios and are at the very beginning of the process, but interest in Evil Ernie and several other of our properties is very high."

According to Pulido, Hollywood interest in Chaos isn't limited to Ernie. Studio suitors are currently looking at The Omen (which may have a name change) and Dead King among other properties.

To make a film that meets his vision of what Ernie should be, Pulido is looking outside the traditional Hollywood loop for a crew.

"Evil Ernie clearly is horrific and it has plenty of action," Pulido said. "For me, it's a creepy, eerie horror movie at the get-go, and the second act is action-oriented.

"To suit our vision of the movie, I'm looking toward cutting-edge music video directors, as opposed to established old Hollywood pros, to give Evil Ernie a cutting-edge, new feeling."

Finally, don't expect the big-screen Ernie to be just like his four-color counterpart. The film version of the destroyer of the Earth will be a more modern version. "We will be updating Ernie a little for the movie," Pulido said. "Since the movie will be about the origin of Evil, we'll keep the heart of the story, but we'll be updating his look and elements of the story, so, when it comes out, it will feel right now. The Evil Ernie movie should be a twisted amalgamation of an old Universal horror movie, a Hong Kong action film, and '60s-style psychotronic films. But let's call it what it is. It'll be a monster movie, and our first job will be to scare people."

Rouleau on a roll. While Duncan Rouleau may be a newcomer to the halls of Mass o' Media, he's certainly not a newcomer to Hollywood. The 32-year-old penciller of X-Factor and Alpha Flight and former storyboard artist recently sold a screenplay to Universal and Dark Horse called The Mysterious Eightball. "It's about a super-hero-type guy who goes around solving crime with his, you guessed it, mysterious eightball," Rouleau said. "I wrote it before I really got into comics, when I was doing storyboards for a variety of movies. I had my foot in the door, so I figured that I could write a movie. I gave it a shot, got an agent, and it was picked up shortly after."

As if that weren't enough, Rouleau is also waiting to hear from Sony about another project he's written. "Everything looks good, but now I'm just waiting to hear about timelines and numbers and people," Rouleau said. "It's pretty hectic — I'm writing movies in the morning and pencilling comics in the afternoon. Hopefully, all this work will pay off."

Bond war continues. According to The Hollywood Reporter, MGM has asked a federal judge to grant a preliminary injunction to prevent Sony from going ahead with plans to give the legendary spy a new home at Sony Pictures. While MGM asserted that Sony already has a Bond script in the works, Sony denied any such script or development plans.

Hitting the Mark. The Rob Liefeld-written end of the millennium battle between good versus evil has found new help in Hollywood. Not only did Will Smith sign on to star and produce The Mark, but he also was able to attract the attention of his Independence Day (and now Godzilla) buddies Dean Devlin and Roland Emmerich. According to Variety, the two have come aboard as producers of the project and will lend a hand with the special effects, no doubt giving it a Devlin-Emmerich feel. The project should begin filming as soon as a director is landed and Smith completes his current project, The Wild, Wild West.

Kudos are due to Mike and Renee George for the successful completion of the fifth Pittsburgh Comicon. The Georges have built this con up to be one of the best in the Northeastern United States. Everybody involved with it seems to have a great time.

The addition of a retailers' expo was a welcome idea. Now, if only some of the major publishers would participate, this show would attain even greater status.

Again, congratulations to the Georges for a great con.

I wanted to publicly say thanks to Bill Morrison and Paul Dini for hosting a party celebrating the career of Dan DeCarlo.

It was nice to see a veteran like DeCarlo honored for his incredible body of work. He and other "old-timers" have made comics what they are, and could be, by their hard work, quality product, strict schedules, and professionalism. It's tough for me to see the veterans at the San Diego con at the autograph tables with nobody around, while the latest flash in the pan has a big crowd. I wish we could honor someone every month, but even then it would take years to catch up.

Thanks again to Bill and Paul for making a difference. In an industry stumbling and so focused on the future, it may be wise to look upon the past for answers. In fact, why don't we ask those who have been there?

Re: The Green Lantern issue — and the Green Lantern issue.

To get this out of the way first, let me just say I'm not a big Hal Jordan fan and I'm distrustful of organized fan-militia movements. However, Peter David's article in #1274 is a splendid illustration of the mindset that got the comic-book people into this mess.

It's generally agreed the story disposing of Hal Jordan by turning him into a psycho killer and subsequently killing him was so insulting and cruel to longtime fans, it would have been difficult to sell them any sort of "new" Green Lantern.

It's similarly agreed Kyle Rayner is a vapid character who can't live up to the hype spun around him. David ignores this. To his way of thinking, the fans are being obstreperous. They have no business complaining about what's done to characters or refusing to buy titles they no longer like. Moreover, their complaints are dismissed as idiotic, not worth taking seriously. His point, of course, is that fans have no business objecting to stories they don't like, callous and/or ham-handed approaches to characters they care about, or arrogant treatment by pros. The fans are merely a herd of brainless rabble squalling mindlessly about nothing that could possibly matter. They should shut up, buy the comics, and bask in the brilliance the pros so kindly provide for them.

It's things like this that makes comics fandom so fun nowadays. Trying to explain in a letters column why you don't feel an idea works is now rather like trying to suggest to Norma Desmond she might want to try dinner theater. The comics people simply aren't interested. They're too busy fantasizing themselves beleaguered geniuses.

The fact a real professional artist listens to criticism (and acts upon or ignores it by his own conscience, accepting the consequences) and struggles at all times to improve his work and make it the best he possibly can produce is simply lost on them. They're not interested in producing good work. They're interested in being stars. So they spend most of their time posturing and direct minimal effort into the actual work. They don't bother to research, they make no effort to think ideas through, their stories are derivative and slapdash, they depend more on gimmicks than on quality, and, when they're busted on it, they try to pass themselves off as persecuted.

Guys, it is not the fans' job to buy anything you care to throw at them. It is your job to make the fans want to buy stuff. If the fans are strongly opposed to something you've done, it is your job to convince them otherwise. They are not required to give you a chance if they don't want to. You can't order people to like something.

It's easy to be dismissive of the fans' feelings ("Hell, it's a comic book, people. Grow up!") when it's not your favorite being gored. Again, I don't approve of guerrilla tactics to force DC into bringing Hal back. But in my opinion, the best method is to simply stop buying the comic books. Loud objections breed controversy, and controversy feeds these people's self-importance. Indifference, however, wounds them deeply. We want them wounded.

P.S. Oh yeah, almost forgot: Maggie Thompson, in her review of Groucho Marx, Detective, forgot to mention that author Ron Goulart has also written several very funny science-fiction novels, now sadly out of print. And, if nothing else, music played in stores at least seems to discourage whistling.

[What Peter created was a multi-level commentary, not only on the topic of character revamps but also on the twin topics of fan reaction and the Internet. To dismiss his point as "of course" that fans have no right to object to what's done with characters is to miss all three levels of his column. I don't believe he's ever so much as suggested that comics readers must buy things they don't like. I do think he has repeatedly suggested that comics readers try something before they make up their minds, and I think that suggestion is inherent in his column.

(And, by the way, there were intense discussions in the Silver Age over what had been done with and to Golden Age characters. Is that surprising?)]

I have a copy of the comic book with the Walt Scott cover painting about which Fred Fredericks was curious in CBG #1247. As he suspected, the picture appeared on Dell's Four Color #1062, with the title Walt Scott's Christmas Stories. Interestingly, the cover has a copyright of 1959, but inside it says, "copyright 1951, 1955, 1957, 1958, 1959, by NEA Service, Inc." Is Four Color #1062 a reprint? I haven't a clue; I don't even know what NEA Service, Inc. might be. This comic book is one of hundreds from my childhood I still have and treasure. (No, my mother did not throw away any of my collection. In fact, my mom was the one who got me interested in comics in the first place.)

Walt Scott's Christmas Stories features three stories, each with a Christmas theme and moral, starring little elf-like guys and talking animals. This is a funnybook I loved as a kid, mostly because of the first panel in the first story, showing cozy cottages on a snow-covered island in a frozen forest stream. I really wanted to visit that place. (And I did, too, in my imagination.) While my good feeling about this comic book has remained with me, I had forgotten all of the stories.

A few Christmases ago, when my son David was learning to read, I remembered the issue and dug it out to share with him. But, as I read it to him, we realized that the stories failed to hold his interest and we never read past the first story. Because of Fred's letter and picture, this past week I brought it out again, this time for my daughter, Wendy, who is now learning to read. Again, it failed to hold a child's interest. We did not even finish the first tale. (Don't think that my kids don't like comics. David, at 13, reads tons of manga; Rumiko Takahashi is his favorite creator, and Wendy, 7 years old, loves Sailor Moon, Sabrina, and Akiko.) Perhaps Walt Scott's time has past. Or perhaps the story was too top-heavy with moral.

After we gave up this time, David, who had been listening, pointed out to me that the moral of the story was suspect. In the first story, Jeremy Christmas (a little magical guy) and his boss (the Spirit of Christmas) use tricks and magic to help four lazy guys learn the value of hard work. David's take on this is why should Jeremy and the Spirit help the lazy guys, since, after they learn about work, they use their energies just for themselves, not for others? David felt the lazy guys should have gone off to help others who need it, since this is what a hero does. Perhaps I'm just an old hippie, and maybe I've read too many comic books, but I think individuals can create change in the world around them; a hero acts to create good changes for others.

All three of these stories are about the joy of poverty. The second is about a rich ratty character who, in the end, gives away all he has to save the starving town. And the last tells of three talking animals who are happy being poor, become rich overnight through magic, and turn unhappy. This moral that it is better to be poor runs through a lot of our fairy tales, myths, religions, politics. The lazy guys were unhappy being poor until they painted and cleaned up their houses. Ratty was more happy in poverty with the rest of the town than he ever was in his rich isolation. And the three animals wish themselves poor and happy again.

I think David expected the lazy guys to go off and do good in the world, rather than stay at home and be happy. Perhaps we expect more of morals these days. And, then, maybe not. This morning, while we were getting ready for school and watching Captain Planet (hey, it was Wendy's choice), a public service announcement told of a Children's Theater Group doing the story of "The Adventurous Grasshopper and the Workaholic Ant."

That is our experience with Walt Scott. He did not appeal to my '90s kids; too '50s, I guess. For David, he found the comic-book boring, but it did get him to think. For Wendy, she stopped me a few pages in, wanting to read to me the book she received for her birthday, Little House in the Big Woods by Laura Ingalls Wilder. And she did. (Watch out, parents! Think Barney is torture? Just wait until you hear Little House read aloud by someone who knows only 75% of the words.)

For me, I still remember the snowy island and the cozy houses and my dreams. Thanks for a great newspaper! I have to think and learn every time I read it.

[My guess is that the most appropriate age for that comic book is 3-4 — with the parent reading each panel aloud to the child and discussing the story at the end. That way, the focus for the child is on the cute animals and environment of the story — which is what he or she is looking at. I'm not suggesting that this was the pinnacle of little kids' comics. The strip was syndicated by NEA, which is now affiliated with United Feature Syndicate (Garfield, Peanuts, et al.), and Scott was a master of cuddly animal pictures.]

In responding to the letter in CBG #1279 from that brave soul, Name Withheld by Request, I hope I won't repeat too many things your readership already knows. But I figure, since people who complain about comics shops get to air and re-air their grievances continually, it is only fair that shop owners get to defend themselves from time to time, as well. I'll take NWbR's points one by one.

1) I would hazard that virtually every store you ask to place an order for you will do so. Not too many of us are in the position where we can afford to turn down the profit from a sale; the idea that we would do so, especially if the person placing the order frequents our shop, is mystifying to me. Often, especially among alternative comics and non-comics lines, items ordered ship late or not at all. This is the fault of the publisher or manufacturer, not the retailer.

2) If you ordered an item, I believe it will also be held for you by any conscientious retailer. On the other hand, if you keep placing orders with someone who does this to you continually, then you're a bigger fool than he is.

3) At this point, I have to wonder what kind of demands you are making on the shops you deal with. I don't know a single retailer who doesn't pull all the titles a customer has requested for his reserve box, assuming the request was made in a timely manner. I don't care how "hot" a comic book is supposed to be. I place orders for everything I carry in my store based on valid sales histories. Sometimes, I let instinct overshadow hard numbers, but not too often. You tell me you want Danger Girl #1 the week before it ships, I'll do my best. But even taking into account the extra copies I ordered because of the buzz on a particular title, I still may not have one for you. If you then ask me for this comic book just days before it arrives, then I have to ask you: Is this really my fault? Or is it yours? Think about it.

Your second statement refers to something I do but I know that all stores don't. I call it funneling. The risk here is all mine: What if you don't actually like the comic book I thought you would? I'll tell you what: You're going to give it back to me and, unless someone else picks it up, I'm going to be stuck with it. Considering that, from what I've been told, most stores have fewer than 20% of their customers use Previews or Comic Shop News as a tool for pre-ordering items of interest, it seems that you (and other customers like you) want retailers to take all the risk.

Well, sorry, buddy, but, outside of some carefully calculated sales projections, I'm not going to risk my livelihood for people who continually don't want to tell me what they want. You give me a Previews order, you get the comic book — plain and simple. Without an order, I'll do what I can.

4) If you keep a reserve box with a store that does this, that's your mistake. The only comics that go on the shelves here prior to subscriber pulls are comics that I've ordered copies in excess of a minimum 25% more than needed for my pull service, and I only do this to maximize my counter space while doing my crazy Wednesday routine.

5) Go check out #1 above. If any store places orders for a title without checking the corresponding reserve numbers for that title, it seems to me it won't have an active reserve membership for long. Was this one that hard to figure out?

6) Customer service is almost an oxymoron now. I find that 90% of the time, people don't even ask you to special-order something. They just say they will look around and get back to you if they don't find it elsewhere first. In terms of store policies, customers generally try to circumvent them, if they can. I always strive to attain and maintain the highest level of customer satisfaction possible. I feel as if I've succeeded in this over the last 16 years, since most of my reserves have been with me for more than a decade, but there are those customers whose demands are so unreasonable that I, and most other stores, could never please them.

7) I've only very rarely encountered stores with pets. Smoking in a store is bad form and may harm the merchandise, as well. It may also be illegal in some states, given the past few years replete with anti-tobacco legislation (which I actively support).

8) I try to keep my store as neat and organized as possible. Sometimes it's tough to do, being that I have only a 400-square-foot store, and it is becoming increasingly more and more difficult to display our merchandise clearly and in an appealing way.

NWbR appears to be representative of the type of customer, reserve or otherwise, who is difficult to deal with in the comics industry. Thank goodness these people make up the minority of our customer base. The rest of our customers know what reality is when it comes to running a comics store in this challenging, difficult, and frustrating time: that the vast majority of comics stores are run by decent, hard-working people who continually try to do the best they can for each and every one of their customers.

IT'S ALWAYS FUN TO LISTEN TO SOME HAPPENIN' SOUNDS WHILE I'M WORKING AT THE BOARD ON A STRIP...

Hmm..WHAT'LL IT BE TODAY? "The WHO LIVE AT LEEDS"? THE EXPANDED CD VERSION IS PROBABLY THE GREATEST CONCERT RECORDING IN ROCK HISTORY. OR MAYBE THE NEW STEREO MIX OF The BEACH BOYS LEGENDARY "PET SOUNDS" ALBUM? OF COURSE, YOU CAN NEVER GO WRONG WITH ABBA, EITHER...

HOWABOUT PLAYING MY CD?

Huh?

HEY! I KNOW YOU!?

you SHOULD. WE SANG A DUET ONCE.*

*TRUE. See MARVEL AGE #98 Mar 1991 -- Self-referencing Fred

YOU'RE THAT SUPER LADY WHO WAS ACTUALLY A PERSON IN REAL LIFE!?

JACQUELINE TAVAREZ.

Uh huh. WHATEVER. YOU WERE GONNA DO CONCERTS IN THAT OUTFIT. IT WAS A CROSS-MARKETING SCHEME!

YOUR COMIC-BOOK NAME WAS... NO, DON'T TELL ME, I'LL GET IT --IT WAS, WHAT? NIGHT THRASHER? NO!!...NIGHTMASK?...THAT'S NOT IT...NIGHT...NIGHT...NIGHT NURSE??

NIGHT-CAT.

NIGHTCAT! SURE! IT'S ALL COMING BACK TO ME. YOU WERE A SINGER WHO VOWED TO GIVE UP SHOWBIZ TO YOUR DYING MOTHER, BUT WHEN A MOBSTER INJECTED YOU WITH A POISONOUS SERUM, INSTEAD OF KILLING YOU, IT GAVE YOU CAT-LIKE ABILITIES. THEN YOUR COP DAD WAS SNUFFED BY THE VERY SAME BADDIE, INSPIRING YOU TO DON A COSTUME AND FIGHT CRIME--AND, COINCIDENTALLY, BY PERFORMING IN THIS GARB, YOU FIGURED IT WAS A WAY OF GETTING AROUND THAT PROMISE YOU MADE YOUR FICTITIOUS MOM!

you READ MY COMIC!

SOMEONE HAD TO.

LMR/RCA RECORDS RELEASED YOUR CD THE SAME TIME MARVEL PUBLISHED A GLITZY BOOKSHELF FORMAT COMIC ABOUT YOU, BUT...

WHAT?

Geez, THAT WAS YEARS AGO. GUESS YOUR CAREER DIDN'T EXACTLY HAVE NINE LIVES, DID IT?...

GRRRR

Heh, heh--NICE KITTY!! RETRACT THOSE CLAWS-- I DIDN'T MEAN ANYTHING BY THAT--BUT IT GIVES ME AN IDEA! YOU MIGHT SELL MORE TICKETS IF YOU DID CAT STUFF ON STAGE--Y'KNOW, LIKE GIVE YOURSELF A BATH WITH YOUR TONGUE?..

FORGET THAT NONSENSE. JUST PLAY MY CD.

I, uh, DON'T OWN YOUR CD...

WHAAAATT? BUT--BUT YOU WERE SO SUPPORTIVE OF ME DURING MY "MARVEL AGE" APPEARANCE, I JUST ASSUMED...?

HEY, WHAT CAN I TELL YA? I WAS JUST DOIN' MY JOB.

"YOUR JOB"?! YOU MEAN TO TELL ME THAT YOU PLUGGED MY MUSIC SOLELY BECAUSE THEY PAID YOU TO?!? WHERE'S YOUR INTEGRITY, MAN?!?

THAT'S AN ODD QUESTION COMING FROM SOMEONE WHO PUT ON THAT RIDICULOUS OUTFIT JUST TO SIGN A RECORD DEAL!

WATCH IT, BUSTER! JIM LEE HIMSELF DESIGNED THESE THREADS!

AND HIS UNCLE Stan WROTE YOUR ORIGIN STORY, BUT EVEN THE GREATEST TALENTS IN THE FIELD CAN'T BRING MUSIC TO LIFE ON THE COMICS PAGE. IT'S A LOSING BATTLE.

YOU CAN'T HAVE CHARACTERS SINGING IN COMICS--IT COMES ACROSS INCREDIBLY LAME. EITHER YOU HAVE TRITE CAPTIONS INFORMING THE READER ABOUT THE TRANSCENDENT SOUNDS HE OR SHE UNFORTUNATELY ISN'T HEARING, OR ELSE YOU'RE STUCK WITH LYRICS WITHOUT BENEFIT OF MUSIC, AND LIKE MOST LYRICS WITHOUT MUSIC, THEY JUST SEEM DUMB.

BUT WHAT ABOUT DAZZLER AND KISS?

DAZZLER WAS LUCKY TO BE A MUTANT WHO HAD THE X-MEN TO FALL BACK ON WHEN TIMES GOT TOUGH AND HER BOOK WAS CANNED. AS FOR KISS, THEIR FOUR-COLOR CAREER HAS BEEN SO SUCCESSFUL BECAUSE a.) THEY DON'T SING IN THEIR COMICS, AND b.) THEY CONCENTRATE ON DOING WHAT THEY'VE ALWAYS DONE BEST, WHICH IS LOOKING COOL.

NIGHTCAT--JACKIE--I NEVER HEARD YOUR CD, SO I CAN'T ACTUALLY JUDGE YOUR MUSIC. APPARENTLY, THOUGH, AUDIENCES WEREN'T EAGER TO ACCEPT YOUR OUTLANDISH STAGE PERSONA. AND AS FOR COMICS, WELL..

...THERE'S REALLY ONLY EVER BEEN ONE CHARACTER ABLE TO PULL OFF THE SOUNDLESS VOCALIZATIONS PROPERLY...

OMIGOSH! HIM??

To suppose Evanier or Aragones could carry a tune--
You'd have to be a total loon.
But the songs they compose
This humble minstrel well knows
Hide truths plain even to Groo--
For my lute playing is sadly "P.U."!

"JIM NABORS GREATEST HITS" SUDDENLY SEEMS APPEALING..

I know, it's only DC rock 'n' roll...

Dear Mr. Silver Age,

I just learned that Lois Lane once sang with Pat Boone. How come that dreamy hunk Jimmy Olsen never sang with a rock 'n' roll star like that?

Allura, Ashtar Galaxy

Mr. Silver Age says: Because Jimmy was too busy being a rock star, Lura. Nobody outdid Superman's Pal when it came to having a finger on the pulse of rock 'n' roll in DC's Silver Age (although The Teen Titans came close).

DC was virtually awash in gear hepcats who dug the crazy scene back then, Daddy-O. Now, it's possible some of those happenin' editors weren't really groovin' to the freaky vibes as much as they wanted us to believe. But that didn't stop them from getting down with the wild beat! So let's see how much you remember about those go-go days when DC tuned in, turned on, and dropped some groovy rock 'n' roll stories on us:

1. In which identity did Jimmy Olsen not become a singing sensation to teen-agers in Metropolis?

a. The leader of the Carrot-Top Cut-Ups.
b. Chip O'Doole.
c. The Red-Headed Beatle.
d. The Bizarro Jimmy Olsen.

2. Who did The Teen Titans accompany on a rock 'n' roll tour of Europe?

a. Holley Hip.
b. The Freak-Outs.
c. Sammy Soul.
d. The Bizarro Jimmy Olsen.

3. What group did Scooter leave when he became a solo act?

a. The Mop Tops.
b. The Banshees.
c. The Groovy Cats.
d. The Tricycles.

DC readers had a hard time avoiding an opportunity to Swing with Scooter in 1966, thanks to many house ads for this Joe Orlando cover. The alleged pop star became a solo act in the states after he ditched what British group?

4. Who captured the entire Justice League?

a. Rick Rock.
b. The Hippies.
c. Johnny Dune.
d. Brother Power, The Geek.

5. Which Maniak was the drummer?

a. Flip.
b. Jangle.
c. Pack Rat.
d. Silver.

Superman grooves to the funky beat of the Krypton Crawl in Jimmy Olsen #58, as Jimbo leads one of his many rock bands. Do you know them all?

We couldn't very well do a feature on DC rock 'n' roll and leave out Brother Power, the Geek, could we? Well, yes, yes, we could have. I'm sorry. It won't happen again.

Answers

1. Answer: c. The Red-Headed Beatle.

Oooh, Mr. Silver Age starts off with a trick question! Because, while Jimbo did, indeed, become said scarlet-tressed mop-top, he did it in the Middle East, not Metropolis. It happened in "The Red-Headed Beatle of 1000 B.C.!" in Jimmy Olsen #79 (Sep 64). Jim was tricked into piloting a time bubble into the past for a criminal, who stranded our hero. To make some shekels, Jimmy tooted on a ram's horn and sold woolen Beatles' wigs to the groovin' ancient teeny-boppers. Please remember: I don't write 'em, I just read 'em.

For the full story, check out Mr. Silver Age's feature "Comic-Book Heroes Meet the Beatles, Silver Age Style!" in CBG's 1994 Annual. A Demand Classic of that article appeared in issue #5 of the late, lamented Dr. Wonder from Old Towne Publishing. Check it out, if only for the details on how The Thing, Torch, Metal Men, Jerry Lewis, and Forbush Man met The Fab Four.

Jim led the Carrot-Top Cut-Ups when "The Swinging Superman!" started grooving uncontrollably to the "Krypton Crawl" in Jimmy Olsen #88 (Oct 65). It wasn't a pretty sight. Superman's Pal became "Alias Chip O'Doole!" in Jimmy Olsen #49 (Dec 60) because he coincidentally was a dead ringer for Lucy's newest singing idol. So he devised this cunning plan to convince her O'Doole was no great shakes. You can see what's coming already, can't you?

[I spared you the even more amazing coincidence of Jimmy's cousin Jerry being a rock star. Jim impersonated him, too, and got those Kryptonian toes a-tappin' in "The Rock 'n' Roll Superman!" in Jimmy Olsen #32 (Oct 58). I also steered clear of "Jimmy Olsen, Crooner!" in Jimmy Olsen #8 (Nov 55), in which Jim got a head cold that made him a singing sensation. You're welcome.]

For those of you who picked answer D, I have but one thing to say. Put this paper down right now and go find Jimmy Olsen #87 (Sep 65). Your life simply isn't complete until you've read "Bizarro-Jimmy, Rock 'n' Roll Star!" 'Nuff said.

2. Answer: a. Holley Hip.

Much as I wish it were Bizarro-Jimmy, the correct answer is Holley Hip, a major British heart-

Titan Tunes

Since they were happening teens, it's not surprising that The Teen Titans were surrounded by rock 'n' roll more than most super-heroes. In addition to the quiz adventure, here are some of my favorite incidents:

• Kid Flash mocked Wonder Girl's enthusiasm for the Beatles in "A Killer Called Honey Bun!" in TT #8 (Mar-Apr 67). He grabbed a guitar and sang, "All I wanna do is hold your fooooot! Yeeeah! Yeh! Yeah!" The scene led to a big letters-page battle between Beatles fans and Titans fans over which group was better. For more on this hard-to-imagine controversy, see the aforementioned CBG 1994 Annual article.

• In "Large Trouble in Space-ville!" in TT #12 (Nov-Dec 67), The Titans had to save D.J. Deejay from aliens, while he was orbiting Earth in a space capsule broadcasting rock tunes to Earth. Kids, don't try this on your next shuttle trip.

• "That same old lovable Wonder Chick in a brand new wrapping!" (i.e., a new costume) was introduced to the world by Robin the Boy Chauvinist during a rock concert by Sammy Soul in "The Rock 'n' Roll Rogue!" in TT #23 (Sep-Oct 69).

• Aqualad and Tula the Aquagirl attended a surface-side rock concert in "Some Call It Noise!" in TT #30 (Nov-Dec 70). The music drove a man being treated with an experimental brain hormone to break out of the hospital and run amok at the concert. The attack dazed Tula, which nearly made her miss getting her hourly hit of salt water. Crazy, Daddy-O!

Wonder Girl is overcome with teen-age delirium upon hearing she's accompanying her favorite rocker to Europe in Teen Titans #7. Who is this lucky guy?

DC ROCKS

throb for Wonder Girl, the lucky buck. He, unfortunately, found himself allied with "The Mad Mod, Merchant of Menace!" in Teen Titans #7 (Jan-Feb 67). (The Freak-Outs and Sammy Soul came up in other Teen Titan issues, so you were close if you picked them.)

The Treasury Department asked The Titans to go with Hip on his European tour to investigate whether the rocker was involved in a smuggling operation. Why four brightly costumed teen-agers were the ideal people to uncover this crime is hard to say. But surely the Treasury Department knew what it was doing, as it always does.

What The Titans actually uncovered was the aforementioned Mad Mod, a Carnaby Street dandy who bore a vague resemblance to Mick Jagger wearing Jimmy Olsen's orange Beatle wig. Pretty scary picture, isn't it? He returned in (duh) "The Return of the Mad Mod!" in TT #17 (Sep-Oct 68). In fact, he also turned up in the new, improved DCU as the new TT's costumer. You just can't keep a good mod down.

3. Answer: b. The Banshees.

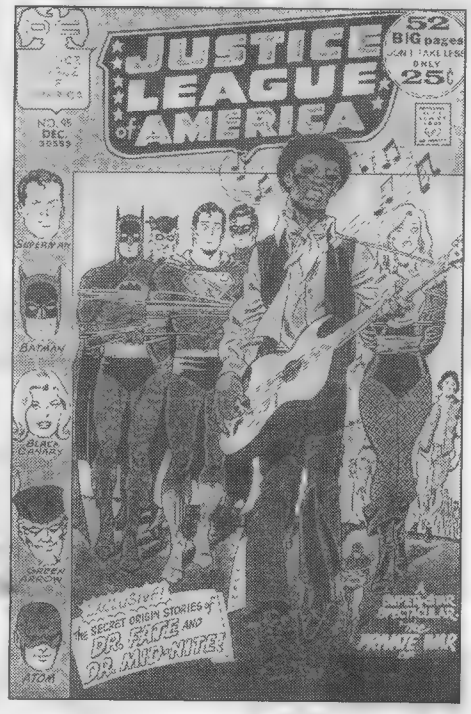
The first issue of Swing with Scooter (Jun-Jul 66) set the stage for the laff-a-minute antics to come. Scooter deserted his British band, the aforementioned Banshees, and went to live in Plainsville, U.S.A., to the astonishment of teen-agers worldwide and the delight of Plainsville girls (but not their boyfriends). Our stateside cast included: Scoot himself, who wore a green mod coat and rode a red motorcycle (maybe that's where Peter Parker got the idea to paint his); his tubby and rich (but miserly) best friend Sylvester; the dashing Kenny; the Reggie-like Malibu; the Betty-like Cookie; the Veronica-like Penny; and Scooter's sister Cynthia.

Scooter moved in with his Aunt Hatta to get away from being a rich, famous, fawned-over rock star. I can dig it. By #2, Scooter's international fame had apparently faded, and he was merely the local girls' heart-throb, sorta the way Archie managed for no reason I could ever figure out. At least in Scooter's case, he had money, talent, fame, and that nifty accent. However he managed it, the Swinging One lasted 35 bimonthly issues, plus one to grow on a year later. So he had a longer career than, say, Freddie & the Dreamers.



GL didn't actually show up when this hepcat captured The JLA in Justice League #95, or the story would've ended so fast we'd have had room for an extra Golden Age reprint. Who is this guy?

4. Answer: c. Johnny Dune.

Johnny took on The Justice League in "The Private War of Johnny Dune!" in JLA #95 (Dec 71). Johnny was a black Vietnam vet who came home to no glory and no job. So he picked up a guitar and became the next Jimi Hendrix (so it says). He became so popular with local kids that he decided to run for mayor. I still don't write 'em; I still only read 'em.

When his political backers reneged on their agreement to help his campaign, he became a bitter rabble-rouser. He was helped by the fact that, while in Vietnam, he'd gained the mutant ability to make people do anything he said (à la Preacher's Jesse Custer).

Green Arrow and The Atom were at the concert when he first used his power to rile up his audience, and they tried to stop him. But four burly hippies overpowered them. Yes, you read that right; don't make me repeat it. Fortunately, as they lost consciousness, GA and Atom managed to signal The JLA to come to their rescue from these rampaging teen-agers. Quite a comedown from battling Kanja Ro, if you ask me.

Fortunately, Superman, GL, and J'onn J'onzz were on another mission, or this story would have had one more page. Instead, Black Canary and Batman parachuted in, and Johnny sicced the mesmerized GA and The Atom on them. Ultimately, Johnny lost his power, or DCU kids still would be buying Johnny Dune CDs.

By the way, Rick Rock was one of Lucy Lane's rockin' idols, The Hippies were a Teen Titan fave, and Brother Power shouldn't even have been mentioned. I'm sorry.

5. Answer: c. Pack Rat.

The Maniaks were introduced to their adoring public in Showcase #68 (May-Jun 67) and got two more tryouts in #69 and #71 before mercifully fading from sight. (Before you ask, Showcase #70 featured a tryout for another faux-Archie cut-up, Binky.)

The band had four members, each with a nickname and one personality trait. Gilbert (Jangle) Jeffries played guitar and did impressions; Silver Shannon sang lead and pinched pennies so tightly it made Uncle Scrooge seem generous; Byron (Pack Rat) Williams played drums and collected odds and ends, which he used to aid the band à la MacGyver; and Philip (Flip) Folger played guitar and did acrobatics.

The group's adventures were supposed to remind readers of the Beatle's Help! or the Monkees' TV show, with the band getting into trouble and running around a lot before being saved. But they just never worked up that manic style, which isn't easy in a comic book under any circumstances. In #68, the group witnessed a mob hit, making them run around to avoid swimming with the fishes. In #69, they met a super-rich fan, making them run around to keep Silver from marrying him. And in #71, they met Woody Allen, making them run around to star in a Broadway show he wrote.

That last adventure, written by E. Nelson Bridwell and drawn by Mike Sekowsky (as were the others), can supply a hint of how hip and happening these tales were. The Maniaks starred in a Civil War-era musical featuring 17 song parodies based on old show tunes. Included were songs set to the toe-tapping music of "Mimi," "My Romance," "My Heart Stood Still," "Johnny One-Note," "Bewitched, Bothered, and Bewildered," and "Thou Swell."

The zany high jinks never stopped in Showcase #68, as The Maniaks wound up hiding from the mob at an amusement park. Do I hear "Help!" playing in the background?

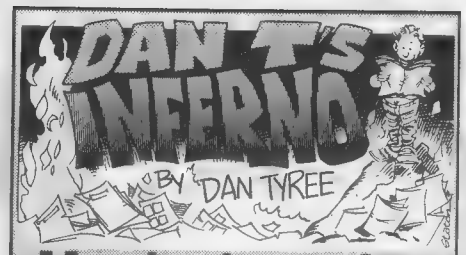
Those probably aren't the tunes readers were most familiar with back in 1967, especially readers picking up a comic book allegedly about a teen-age rock band. But it's a good example of that quirky Silver Age perspective on musical tastes. Today's comics ain't got the same soul as that old-time DC rock 'n' roll.



Musical comics

Comics and music are more intertwined than one might think.

Let's look at newspaper strips first. Remember sultry Burma's theme song of "St. Louis Woman" in Terry and the Pirates? Dick Tracy gave us both the Summer Sisters (1944) and the Mumbles Quartette (1947). In 1964, Li'l Abner couldn't escape the song "I Wanna Hold your Ham," by The Beasties.

More recently, Matt Groening's Life in Hell gave us such "Kids' Greatest Hits" as "I'm Popeye the sailor man/ I live in a garbage can/ I like to go swimmin'/ With bare-naked women ... " And Bloom County showcased Billy and the Boingers, with the record "I'm a Boinger!"/ "U Stink But I ❤ U," included in the trade paperback.

Comic books? The Golden Age gave us: Flash's foe The Fiddler; The Red Skull whistling an eerie rendition of Chopin's "Funeral March"; and the JSA adventure "The Crimes Set to Music" (All-Star Comics #19). Not to mention "Every Little Bug" (in The Spirit) or the Blackhawk battle cry, which in the Mad lampoon "Black and Blue Hawk" became "Over land — Over Sea — We-ee fight for do-re-mi — "

The 1960s ushered in The Merry Marvel Marching Society song ("We belong/ We belong — ") and The Archies. More recently, American Splendor has shown Harvey Pekar scouring second-hand stores for classic "sides."

A couple of musical references that are particularly memorable for me for some reason:

Green Lantern Vol. 2 #75 (Mar 70): GL and a doctor impersonated a couple of troubadours in the anti-matter universe of Qward, and the Emerald Gladiator made an elderly peasant couple cry with the folk song "Rivers of silver, lakes of gold/ Now the story can be told!/ To hungry man his greatest boon/ — A simple pudding and a spoon!" (Hal said he composed the song on the spur of the moment, and I've always wondered why writer John Broome inserted that scene.)

Adventure Comics #477 (Nov 80): Plastic Man attended a taping of TV's Disco Disease, where celebrity judges included Rod Sewage ("Do ya think I'm ugly?/ So what? It don't bug me/ If I remind you of a basset hound!") and Morrie Banalo ("I write the songs that make the young girls itch!")

Yay for the comics' connection with music! Verily, music hath charms to soothe the savage paper cut.

KISS OF CREATION

By Marc Patten

A long, long time ago, when rock music was loud, hair was big, and musical groups put on concerts that Mom and Dad deemed more like devil worship than entertainment, there was a band with a presence so theatrical that it stood out even among the flamboyant rock-and-roll circus the music world had become. The band wore make-up and costumes that gave it a look so striking that a wave of merchandising and licensing ensued for more than a decade. That band was Kiss.

Led by singer and comic-book fan Gene Simmons, the band's first comic-book appearances were published by Marvel in 1978 with the band having super-heroic adventures that ended just in time for the four to make it to the stage to perform another concert. See the sidebar on the opposite page for more information.

In 1997, the band's four original members were reunited and brought back to the land of comics and toys by Todd McFarlane. However, this time, the kids who were going to the concerts (once again riddled with pyrotechnical effects and satanic make-up) and buying the merchandise were joined by Mom and Dad in a wave of nostalgia.

A hard-rock Fantastic Four?

"To be honest, it was a mutual kind of genesis," said Todd McFarlane Productions Marketing and Promotions Director Beau Smith. "Gene Simmons has been a comic-book fan since he was a kid. In fact, he and Marv Wolfman used to trade comics back and forth when they were both in junior high. Todd had always had a vision of Kiss in their costumes with all their demonic themes as kind of an urban-legend/horror comic book. Gene himself had probably seen the group as more like The Fantastic Four — more mainstream."

Smith said that, as far as who called whom first, things are cloudy, but eventually the two got together to talk about the launch of new comics and toys. McFarlane, he said, wanted the set-up of the comic book to be a traveling circus which contained the band members. This way the stories could go anywhere, with the themes and settings varying from issue to issue. "He wanted to make it more of a Twilight Zone kind of thing, where each story had some kind of morality play performed in each town," said Smith.

Kiss: Psycho Circus penciller Angel Medina had been in comics for a number of years, working for Marvel before joining Todd McFarlane Productions. "I submitted a nine-page Spawn story I did along with a couple of Spawn portfolio pieces," said Medina. "Todd gave me a call less than a week later and said, 'We got a bunch of projects here, and the most immediate one we'd like to get off the ground would be this Kiss comic book.' "

Medina said that, although he was a big Kiss fan, he didn't want to do a Kiss comic book like the version that Marvel had done. "When I began talking to Todd about what he wanted to do with the comic book, I thought, 'Man, this isn't a good idea; this is a great idea.' Todd told me that he wanted to do a title that comics fans would read and say, 'Man, I can't believe I just read a Kiss comic book.' It was a challenge I found very do-able."

Kiss writer Brian Holguin got involved late in the creative process. The first issue was solicited as being written by Steve Gerber, who suddenly had to drop out due to prior commitments. Holguin's friendship with Kiss and Spawn colorist Brian Haberlain led to a meeting with McFarlane, who told him to come up with story notes in 24 hours.

This ain't no Josie and the Pussycats.

Holguin had previously worked for Top Cow Productions and was coming off a stint writing 18 issues of the company's flagship title, CyberForce. "It would have been really easy for Todd to do a really cheesy comic based on Kiss and it still would have made money, but he wanted to do something of high quality and more Vertigoesque," said Holguin. "He didn't want to do Josie and the Pussycats with face paint, where the band foils the caper just in time to get to the show. It was going to be a dark, Gothic psychological story, and, for me, that's what clicked."

The premise of the comic book is that there is a traveling circus of lost souls. There are four Kiss elder-type beings who are manifestations of various aspects of human nature and their four earthly counterparts who are members of a circus led by a Gypsy witch who ran the circus. In each story, an outsider travels to the circus with some kind of emotional baggage or problem. The appropriate Kiss figure then plays a role in the change, retribution, punishment, or reward that would resolve the visiting person's situation.

"We're working on how to build the mythology of this strange circus, how it came into being, and who these characters are," Holguin said. "I'm a big fan of single-issue stories, while Todd likes ongoing arcs, so there is a bit of both."

Each band member represents a different aspect of humanity. "The gist is that all four together would represent a psychological whole," said Holguin. "There's the dark side (The Ringmaster: Gene Simmons), the emotional side (The Clown: Paul Stanley), the animalistic side (The Animal Trainer: Peter Criss), and the ascending spiritual side (The Stiltman: Ace Frehley).

Each one of the circus characters had committed a crime and was put under a curse related to his plight. For example, The Ringmaster was a vengeful highwayman in 18th century England who became the avatar of the Gene Simmons character, the embodiment of vengeance and destruction. The elder characters are more primal forces, and, when the circus calls on them to act on Earth, the elder characters possess their human aspects and transform them into solid visual representations to do the work that needs to be done."

Smith said, "In our comic book, they are not in a band. They are the essences of retribution, if you will. Todd laid down all the groundwork and took in all of the band members' suggestions for their characters, and it mixed together very well."

Room to play. Holguin and Medina both described a strong working environment. "Todd plotted everything out with me until about #3, plus we were getting faxes from the band members to make sure they were happy with it," he said. "Since then, I've pretty much been left on my own. Todd is really the best person I've ever worked for, and I've worked for places like the Los Angeles Times. There isn't someone breathing down your neck or looking over your shoulder all the time, as at many companies, but there is someone there to help you out any time you need something. The fact that there is a strong creative team on this title makes things easier."

Medina said he has a lot of creative freedom in laying out the story from Holguin's plots. "McFarlane really let me go to town as far as adding things into the story went," he said. "I really hadn't planned on staying on this comic book for very long and had talked to Todd about doing other things obviously Spawn-related. But this Kiss thing turned out to be something I really enjoyed. When I received the plot to #3, I thought, 'Boy, I'm going to be on this title for a while.' If you had told me years ago that the most fun comic book you'd ever do would be based on Kiss, I'd have said, 'No way!' "

While Medina said he doesn't have a favorite character, he said he tries to showcase each member's personality and essence in a unique style. Holguin has a more specific opinion. "At first, you're inclined to like the Gene character because he's the most visual. He breathes fire and so forth. However, I'm really starting to like the Ace Frehley character. There's this wild cosmic imagery that goes along with him. In the comic book, Ace is the embodiment of balance, of yin and yang, of cosmic harmony."

Working on their figures. The development of the line of Kiss action figures and comics occurred simultaneously, with discussions of everything beginning only about six months prior to the first wave of toys actually shipping — or approximately a year and a half ago, according to Smith. Smith said delays, if any, usually only occur in the approval process, since all the band members need to view final prototypes of the toys, as well as visuals and storylines for the comics. The ideas and production usually proceed relatively quickly, he said.

Each band member had specific ideas about how his character would look as a toy and in the comic book. "Todd went to a couple of the concerts and had meetings with each of the band members," said Smith. "Peter Criss (the cat-costumed drummer) said he wanted a tail and spikes and his drums to shoot things. Gene Simmons wanted blood splattering on his guitar."

The toy controversy over whether the figure stands included in the package will be individual letters spelling out "KISS" or miniature record-album replicas can finally be cleared up for concerned collectors. While early versions containing the letter-stands were initially difficult to come by, due to difficulties in production, the second releases, featuring the square record-album stand, are noticeably rarer, because they were produced in only half the quantity of the letter-stand versions, according to Smith.

June will see the release of a new assortment of Kiss toys based on the Kiss: The Psycho Circus comic book. "People will be able to see how much the sculptors and design guys molded the figures to Angel and Kevin Conrad's art in the comic book."

Although McFarlane productions has no plans for additional solo Kiss comic books other than the ongoing series, Smith said there is a definite possibility of Kiss crossing over with Spawn. "We're not a studio that wants to produce 20 comic books a month. We pretty much keep our small amount of pigs in the pen and we're not looking to multiply to cows and chickens. When we do a new comic book, it's very much thought out and planned before we actually do something."

More than 20 years after Kiss rocked its fans for the first time, the band's popularity remains seemingly stronger than ever. Kiss: The Psycho Circus has had a steady rise in sales month after month since its inception nine months ago. In addition to the direct market, the comics are sold on the newsstand and at all the band's concerts.

Does Smith believe that McFarlane is responsible for a resurgence in Kiss licensing and popularity? "Not at all," he said. "The Kiss fan club has more than four million members. Their concerts routinely sold out multiple performances of 20 and 30,000-seat venues. For all intents and purposes, Kiss is here to stay and rock."

MARVEL'S THREE KISSES

By Jack Abramowitz

Kiss, the hottest band in the land, currently enjoys a comic-book run whose success far surpasses the Beatles, Lita Ford, Alice Cooper, and other rock artists who have appeared in comics form. But Image's current Psycho Circus series is far from Kiss' first foray into comics. Our favorite Kings of the Nighttime World had not one, not two, but three separate incarnations in the Marvel Universe.

The first incarnation of Kiss appeared in, of all places, Howard the Duck #12-13. Since nobody believed our reality-displaced waterfowl was actually a duck, he was committed, along with his politically incorrect speech-impaired gal pal, Winda. Following a crack on the head, smoke started billowing out of Winda's skull. Stepping out of the fog came The Demon, The Starchild, The Cat, and The Space Ace: Kiss! Kisser Peter Criss (the cat) gave a drug-addled Howard the following advice, "When you meet reality head-on, Kiss it, smack it in the face!" (To which Howard replied, "Hah?")

Not recognizing Kiss enough to seek autographs, the asylum summoned demonologist Daimon ("Son of Satan") Hellstrom. (Sure. Why not?) He determined that Winda's mind had tapped into an alternate reality, an event not likely to recur.

At least not until Marvel Super Special #1. That's when four youths (Gene, Paul, Peter, and Ace) rescued an obese, blind Santa Claus lookalike wearing a T-shirt several sizes too small and a fur thong. (Do you doubt me? Do you really think I could make this up?) Dizzy (that's his name) presented them with the Box of Khyscz. (Pronounced "kiss." Awww! You guessed!) In the box were dolls — excuse me — action figures of Demon, Cat, and Space Ace, as well as a star for Paul's eye. (Why didn't he receive a figure, as well? Go figure.) The four received the powers of Kiss, battling Dr. Doom and Mephisto and attracting the attention of (and cameo appearances by) Spider-Man, The Fantastic Four, The Avengers, et al. The comic book had the dubious distinction of containing real Kiss blood in the ink. (Sorry the reprint is blood-free.)

Were these four guys channeling the inter-dimensional Kiss members from Howard the Duck? Were they alternate-universe counterparts? The Son of Satan is on hand (see the last page of the first chapter), but he's not saying.

Even though they turned in their mystic talismans at the end of the story, the members of Kiss returned in Marvel Super Special #5. The talismans no longer resembled Mego action figures, having been "altered to reflect [their] greater understanding of [their] new alter egos." Now they resembled a much fancier star (for Paul), a lightning bolt (for Ace), a cat's face (for Peter), and a dragon (for Gene; it actually looks more like a chess knight). The story introduced the land of Khyscz, dinosaur detective Saurian Holmes, and many other features best left forgotten.

This 1978 appearance was Kiss' last "super-hero" appearance until the 1996 KissNation. The reaction of other characters implies that the quartet has been active during the interim. (Psylocke thinks, "This is my chance to scan the minds of the mysterious Kiss and learn the secret behind their powers.")

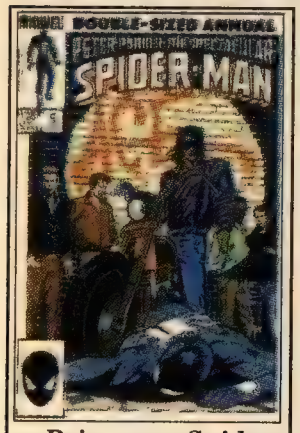
Kiss, Dr. Strange, and The X-Men (well, some of them) fight a menace emanating into the Marvel universe from "our" universe. We learn that Kiss the rock group doesn't exist in the Marvel continuum. (Wolverine suggests he will gut the band if not provided with free CDs to take back to his universe.) This is strange, since the Marvel universe was always supposed to be "our" universe; the company has even "explained" that all Marvel Comics are licensed retellings of real exploits. Ahh, go figure.

A down side is that the story takes place before original members Peter and Ace rejoined the group, leaving replacements Eric Singer and Bruce Kulick to fill their shoes. This makes the symmetry of the crossover less than ideal. But there are enough high points (Wolverine calling Gene "Kabuki Man" comes to mind) to make up for it.

So there are three Kisses in Marvel's tangled multiverse. There is the inter-dimensional force that carries messages to world-lost waterfowl, the fantastic foursome who fight mystical menaces, and the "real life" band who sing "Cold Gin and Black Diamond." Add to the mix Image's Psycho Circus Kiss and the preponderance of intercompany crossovers these days, and you've got the makings of a real "Crisis of Infinite Kiss."

Strange relationship

How Prince added to comics mythology — and comics returned the favor



Prince as Spider-Foe. It wasn't long after Prince entered the mass culture with his portrayal of the defiant (but fashionable) cyclist in Purple Rain that he really made the big time — on Spider-Man's fight card. Sort of. In Peter Parker Annual #5, Spidey swings into the violent world of street gangs and encounters Ace, a defiant (but fashionable) cyclist who, though neutral, commands the respect of the gangs.

"My notion was that he was basically a super-powered version of Prince," said Ace creator Peter David. "However, as it turned out, artist Mark Beachum simply drew Ace to look like himself, which pretty much amounted to the same thing." The covers to both Annual #5 and the sequel Annual #6 are inspired by the "Purple Rain" album cover.

Ace thrashes Spider-Man in each of their encounters in these stories. Spidey doesn't lay a glove on the nimble Ace, who has a way of vanishing into the fog as easily as a vocalist in a music video. "Essentially, Ace was a superb knife fighter," David said. "He also had the psionic ability to dodge any blow thrown at him (as opposed to the Spider-sense which is a kind of warning thing). He was literally untouchable."

Finally, the ambivalent Ace is moved into action against the gangs when his family is torn apart by violence. Ace rides out of town, and Spidey is left wondering why he'd wanted so to deliver a typical super-villain defeat to a character that didn't fit that definition.

Mystery. Faux mysticism. Hints of behind-the-scenes adventures. Elements which have been part of the public images of many musical groups for the balance of the rock era. Poorly done — or overdone — and such efforts can cause ridicule. Executed well, and these additions to a musician's cult of personality can translate to commercial success for decades — as with Kiss — and occasionally outlast the band entirely. (If you have any idea who the Walrus was, you've got the idea.)

Elements, also, which play to the strengths of comic books. In comics, Alice Cooper can struggle with his demons more than figuratively and Kiss can possess the friend of a talking duck. And in one odd case, a musician has not only appeared in comics but has interpreted them musically, incorporating some of their elements into his own fantastical backstory.

Known by as many alternate sobriquets as any comic-book hero and today recognized by a graphic symbol (just as many of them are), The Artist Formerly Known as Prince (referred to hereafter as Prince in defense of our editor's sanity) has appeared in at least three comic books in the 1990s, directly inspired a foe for Spider-Man, and even provided his own parallel story to the 1989 Batman film.

Prince as Batfriend. When shooting began on Warner Bros.' Batman in September 1988, execs began pursuing Prince, a Warner act, to provide songs for the film. According to biographer Per Nilsen, Prince visited director and Prince fan Tim Burton at Pinewood Studios in London in January 1989, where he was shown a rough cut of the film and saw the filming of a scene between Batman and Vicki Vale at the Batcave.

Inspired, Prince recorded eight new songs in sessions at his Minneapolis studios and played them for Burton at the end of February. They included two songs for Burton's planned musical interludes: "Rave unto the Joy Fantastic" for the Joker's rampage at the Flugelheim Museum, and "200 Balloons" for the Joker's victory parade.

By this point, according to Burton's July 9, 1992 Rolling Stone interview, he had found his admiration for Prince overshadowed by the feeling that the record label was meddling in the film; he described the pairing of the two marketing arms as an "unholy alliance." Adamantly, Burton rejected both "200 Balloons" and "Rave" as inappopriate to the story. In their place, Prince offered "Trust" for the parade scene and one of his older songs, "Partyman," for the museum scene.

Prince's Batman story. It's easy to see why the Batman film appealed to Prince, given the mythology built in his previous work: He often refers to a split in his own personality between spirituality and madness, made manifest through music. Infamously, Prince sang as his "good" and "evil" sides on 1987's angry Black Album before a religious conversion caused him to pull it from distribution.

With "Batman" offering a safer chance to tell the same kind of musical story, Prince crafted his own mini-rock opera for the soundtrack. According to the liner notes, all songs are "sung" from the perspectives of the characters populating this companion piece: Batman/Bruce Wayne, The Joker, Vicki Vale, Prince himself, and Gemini, a Joker/Batman hybrid who is Prince's personal nemesis.

The soundtrack opens menacingly with "The Future," in which Batman laments the state of Gotham City, where crime and drugs are pervasive and old movie heroes are all society has to offer in defense.

His antithesis, Prince's Joker, is introduced in the driving beat of "Electric Chair" as a fusion of lust and madness who proudly says he deserves to die if impure thoughts are sinful. "Arms of Orion" follows, a saccharine duet between Prince as Bruce Wayne and Sheena Easton as Vicki Vale.

"Partyman," the Joker's museum theme, is also the subject of an elaborate, little-seen video clip by Prince. The video finds Prince hosting a wild bacchanalia at the museum (complete with a live mermaid in a tank and 17 horn players) where everyone wears Joker make-up on half their faces. As the frenzy heightens, Prince's Joker taunts a monkey in a Batman shirt, sacrifices a female Batman groupie, and shocks a "Weird Al" Yankovic double with an exploding cigar. Finally — in a jarring scene for a light number — only Prince's Joker remains, laughing hysterically, as the camera pans across wall-to-wall dead partygoers. No Smylex gas here: Partying did them in.

Prince's most thoughtful consideration of the Batman legend, "Vicki Waiting," describes from Wayne's perspective how difficult it is to maintain a relationship while leading a double life:

"All is well in Gotham City:
The sound of terror is all you hear.
Sometimes a pistol takes the place of her body
Sometimes her body's here.
But, you see, when crime is your only love,
All that matters is the present, the here and now."

Wayne goes on to worry whether he could ever raise a family and, in fact, whether his traits are worthy of passing on at all. He marvels at the remarkable patience of Vicki while he sorts his life out.

In "Trust," The Joker offers one temptation after another; appropriately, it's heard over The Joker's money giveaway parade — where his plans are to "kill a million people an hour." The song's last stanza, not heard in the film, is Prince's own spiritual response to The Joker's attempts to seduce Gotham with easy gratification.

Prince loses focus on the story in his selection of later tracks. "Lemon Crush" and "Scandalous" (vocals by Vicki and Batman, respectively) are inserted with little relation to his earlier narrative.

But the final track on the album is surely the most familiar: "Batdance," the first single released and only the fourth Prince song to reach #1 on the U.S. charts. The video depicts a brooding Prince in the Batcave awakened by the appearance of Gemini, also played by Prince, on a huge Bat-shaped movie screen, something no cave should be without. Dialogue samplings from the actors are heard, as Gemini works his way through a mass of dancers in Joker, Vicki, and Bat garb. As the tempo quickens, Gemini contemplates an electric chair as the Joker- and Bat-dancers struggle around him. A shotgun appears on the chair, and Gemini — unable to resist when even Batman can't reconcile his homicidal urges — grabs it and fires. The Batdancers seize Gemini, whose last act is to destroy the electric chair before vanishing with them in the smoke. A surviving witness to this imaginary battle between musical power and soul, Prince concludes in the liner notes: "Don't dance with the devil in the pale moonlight. The curious try and always die."

Q. How many songs from Prince's soundtrack are heard in the film?

A. Six. The two obvious ones, "Trust" and "Partyman," are heard during musical interludes. "Scandalous" is heard over the closing credits. Instrumentals from "Electric Chair" and "Vicki Waiting" are played at the Wayne Manor charity ball.

And you've got a good ear if you caught "The Future" — actually the film's first audible dialogue — coming from a car radio in the opening scene.

While Director Burton later said he regretted including Prince's music (and critics agreed), the soundtrack and Prince's accompanying mini-drama was well reviewed, and its sales of 6 million copies represented his greatest commercial success since Purple Rain.

Prince as... Prince. Prince himself turns up in comics form in an unauthorized biography in Rock & Roll Comics #21 from Revolutionary Comics. The story, written by Todd Loren and drawn by Stuart Immonen, follows Prince until the release of his 1990 film, Graffiti Bridge. The issue offers a healthy mix of trivia and rumors.

Prince didn't appear as a character in an authorized comic until the 1990s in two issues from DC's Piranha Music imprint, both written by Dwayne McDuffie. 1992's Prince: Alter Ego represents a companion piece to Prince's Batman backstory. Prince returns home to discover that Gemini has returned and taken control of his world, from his Glam Slam club to his Graffiti Bridge sanctum. McDuffie

It's a bird, it's a plane, it's a musical!

By Patrick Daniel O'Neill

There had been musical plays about heroes with dual identities before. (Romburg and Hammerstein's The Desert Song features a swashbuckling hero who leads two lives.) There had been musicals in which the lead character spends a lot of time flying (Peter Pan). There had even been musicals based on comics characters (Li'l Abner).

It's a Bird, It's a Plane, It's Superman (book by David Newman and Robert Benton, music and lyrics by Charles Strouse and Lee Adams) combined all of the above. Exactly how Strouse and Adams decided to base a musical on the Man of Steel is unclear; it's not described in the history of the show as told in the liner notes of the cast album. CBG columnist and Broadway aficionado Mark Evanier says the show's cost (some $700,000, a huge sum at the time) was reportedly financed by a single source, and many have since suggested it may have been someone with a connection to DC Comics, then owned by the Donenfeld and Leibowitz families.

At any rate, the composers had backing and went looking for writers to supply a story. They turned to magazine writers Newman and Benton. Next was a director — and Broadway legend Hal Prince signed on.

Like any musical, the show went through many changes before opening. Joan Hotchkiss was replaced by Patricia Marand in the role of Lois Lane, and two of her songs were scrapped, replaced by others more in keeping with Marand's style. There was a big hoopla about looking for a suitable Superman, and Bob Holiday, a strapping guy with a booming baritone, was eventually cast.

Bob Holiday appeared as Superman with Patricia Marand as Lois Lane.

But Holiday, despite having the title role, didn't get top billing. That went to Broadway veteran Jack Cassidy in the role of Walter Winchell-like columnist Max Mencken. In a supporting role, Linda Lavin got her first big break as Max's secretary, Sydney.

The show opened at the Alvin Theater March 29, 1966, at the height of the public interest in things comic book, engendered by the Batman TV series. That interest did not seem to include Broadway theater-goers: The show ran only 129 performances, closing July 17.

It's a Bird, It's a Plane, It's Superman got good reviews, though. John McCain of the New York Journal-American called it "a crazy conception, but it has style and speed." Whitney Bolton of The Morning Telegraph praised the score, saying it was "brassy, swift and impish, with Lee Adams giving the songs scoffing lyrics designed to make square lyricists blush."

Strouse admitted they had attempted to ride the crest of a trend, "and riding a trend can be a very dangerous thing."

Strouse never gave up on comics as a source of inspiration. Eleven years later he teamed with Mike Nichols, Thomas Meehan, and Martin Charnin to create Annie. And Benton and Newman eventually co-wrote the screenplay for the 1978 film version of Superman.

And in February 1975, ABC-TV, in its attempt to battle Johnny Carson's domination of late-night viewing, aired a production of the show starring David Wilson in the title role, with Ken Mars as Max, Lesley Ann Warren as Lois, Loretta Swit as Sydney, and David Wayne as Sedgwick.

The Plot (song titles in parentheses): After an overture featuring Superman's many feats in defense of Metropolis, the Man of Steel retires to his civilian identity of Clark Kent ("Doing Good") and heads for the Daily Planet, where the staff and other Metropolitans describe what he means to them ("We Need Him"). He doesn't mean much to columnist Max Mencken, but Superman means everything to reporter Lois Lane ("It's Superman").

Lois is so obsessed with Superman she doesn't see how much Jim Morgan, assistant to scientist Prof. Abner Sedgwick, loves her. She rejects his attitude that people are meaningless ("We Don't Matter at All"). Sedgwick, tenured at Metropolis Institute of Technology, is a 10-time Nobel Prize loser and has come up with a plan to get the respect he deserves ("Revenge"): the destruction of Superman, "the world's symbol of goodness."

The girl reporter does, however, know exactly how much Max Mencken desires her and she sarcastically turns him down, despite his showy song-and-dance proposition ("The Woman for the Man"). Max's secretary, Sydney, has a thing for Clark Kent, believing he could be really a knockout with a little makeover ("You've Got Possibilities").

Slowly, Jim breaks through Lois' resolve, as she ponders what life could be like if she weren't hanging on, waiting for Superman to make the first move ("What I've Always Wanted").

Meanwhile, Sedgwick's plan continues apace. He invites The Man of Steel to inaugurate the MIT physics hall, named in the hero's honor, then subjects him to a psychoanalysis that leaves Superman questioning his mission in the world. Then, during the ceremony ("It's Super Nice"), the speakers' platform collapses, and Superman is forced to support it. With the hero thus tied up, Sedgwick blows up City Hall.

But that doesn't end it. Sedgwick wants Superman dead and, using a computer and his knowledge of behavioral engineering, he plots to kill The Man of Steel — a deed he presumes will make the world recognize his scientific greatness.

Of course, Sedgwick's not alone in his distaste for the hero: Mencken uses Superman's failure to prevent the destruction of City Hall as an excuse to write a devastating column about The Man of Steel ("So Long, Big Guy"), intended to turn the citizens of Metropolis against their protector. The combination of Sedgwick's manipulations and Mencken's yellow journalism has Superman struggling to find his way ("The Strongest Man in the World").

Back at The Planet, Sydney — aware of her boss' vanity — attempts to goad him ("Ooh, Do You Love You"), but Max is too stuck on himself to even understand her sarcasm. Instead, he learns of Sedgwick's plans and allies himself with the scientist ("You've Got What I Need") in a plot to lure Superman to his doom by kidnapping Lois and holding her hostage. As the villains' plan takes shape, the city wonders what has happened to its hero ("It's Superman" reprise).

Broadway audiences believed that a man could fly more than a decade before Christopher Reeve, when Bob Holiday (above) took to the air in 1966.

Held prisoner in a power station by Max and Sedgwick's hirelings, an acrobatic troupe, Lois refuses to accept that all is lost ("I'm Not Finished Yet"). Superman, finally shaking off his indecision, flies to Lois's rescue and, in a rousing flying/acrobatic battle ("Pow! Bam! Zonk!"), defeats the villains. Sedgwick dies in an electrical accident.

But Lois doesn't even get a chance to thank her rescuer. With the immediate danger past, Superman takes off to prevent new disasters ("Finale").

The Original Cast

Superman/Clark Kent: Bob Holiday
Max Mencken: Jack Cassidy
Lois Lane: Patricia Marand
Sydney: Linda Lavin
Sedgwick: Michael O'Sullivan
Jim: Don Chastain

The cast album is available on Sony Broadway (SK 48207) and features four "demonstration cuts" (recordings of Strouse and Adams performing songs from the show for potential backers), including three cut from the show — "Dot Dot Dot," "A Woman Alone," and "Did You See That?" as well as a version of "You've Got Possibilities" with alternate lyrics.

describes parallel lives for Prince and Gemini: once childhood friends in music until Gemini exploited its dark powers to seduce and destroy. Gemini's experiments led to madness and a rubber room — implicitly, during the story documented by the Batman album — but his return puts the souls of his listeners at risk. A battle including cycle action and martial artistry culminates (where else?) on stage, where Prince wins the audience over with a subtler, more spiritual sound. With no one listening, Gemini's powers were lost.

Probably the closest expression of Prince's themes in comics form, Alter Ego went to three printings and is otherwise structurally very familiar; check out Batman Special #1's "The Player on the Other Side" (1984) for basically the same story, only with pointy ears.

The second Piranha effort, 1994's Three Chains of Gold, adapts the storyline from the musician's 1992 album (simply titled "⍏" and video short feature. Playing in the Middle East, Prince and his band come to the rescue of Princess Mayte, (based on Prince's eventual wife) whose evil uncle is attempting to seize power. Prince and the princess seek out the tomb of Gilgamesh, where three golden chains are combined (into a ⍏ symbol, naturally) and the usurper is defeated in true Lost Ark fashion.

The source material wasn't the freshest — the story wouldn't have been out of place in The Adventures of Bob Hope. The band's antics are amusing, however, and this long-form comics adventure demonstrates how easily Prince's real-life personage assimilates into the four-color comics world. After all, his wild stage outfits don't look out of place at all in a medium where gaudy costumes are common.

With Prince's dispute with Time Warner leading him to change his name and defect to his own label, future comics from DC — and further Batman stylings from him — seem unlikely in the extreme. In any event, his musical elaborations on the Batman legend and the comics' contribution to Prince's own mythology hint at the potential for even greater synergies between future comics and musical artists, should they choose to explore them.

CBG Customer Service Award – 1990

We have original art for sale by many different artists who all drew for Cracked Magazine. Most are well known Golden Age Comic Book Artists. Each has their own unique style. Most pages have the dialogue on the page with the odd word balloon missing. All pages are in good condition and are priced according to the quality of the art. Higher priced pages by the same artist represent superior artwork. Almost all pages represent complete 1, 2, 3 or 4 page stories as the stories in Cracked were all short.

"Next to standing in front of an altar with Superman, Lois Lane's wildest dream is to share a microphone with America's top singing star and idol of millions, Pat Boone!"

— "Superman's Mystery Song," Lois Lane #9 (May 1959)

Might as well slap a big old Spoiler Warning across this entire column, because, in the interest of literary scholarship, I will be revealing the endings of the three stories featured in Lois Lane #9. It cost a thin dime back in 1959, but today a fine copy goes for around $25 and a near-mint copy will set you back $250 or more. That's why they call it the Silver Age.

"Can you name any other middle-aged-plus Christian performers who can see the humor in singing heavy-metal songs while wearing chains and leather?"

I chose to write about this comic book because it actually fits this week's theme of music in comics and because I admire Pat Boone. Can you name any other middle-aged-plus Christian performers who can see the humor in singing heavy-metal songs while wearing chains and leather?

The Curt Swan cover for this issue was one of many delightfully bizarre ideas that were launched from the editorial offices of the late Mort Weisinger. Superman flies into frame to see Lois and Pat singing a duet. He says:

"Pat Boone and Lois Lane are singing a new song about me! It's a great tune, but I must use all my super-powers to prevent it from becoming a hit!"

With such a cover, the 1959 reader knew the story would be the closing act of the issue. So, like Uncle Mortie, I'm going to keep you in suspense a while longer.

"The Most Hated Girl in Metropolis" by writer Robert Bernstein and artist Kurt Schaffenberger leads off the issue. The tale falls into the "Superman and/or his friends commit acts of unspeakable cruelty toward each other" category, something that happened so many times in Weisinger-edited comics that it must be considered a subgenre.

Lois wakes up on a glorious morning and the day goes to heck after that. Jimmy Olsen calls her a rat. Clark Kent tells her what she did was despicable. Perry White fires her.

What did she do? She revealed Superman's secret identity as Clark Kent to the world in a front-page story. Oh, sure, she never meant to release the story. It was something she'd written a year earlier and then discarded for lack of evidence. But there it was, gone directly from her desk drawer to print without, apparently, ever being edited. Perry stopped the presses, but a few copies of the paper got out anyway. Lois has betrayed Superman for the sake of a scoop. She is even driven from "a restaurant frequented by Planet reporters" for her treachery. Her life in Metropolis is over.

(Digression. Believe it or not, there were no bars in 1959. That is why the Planet reporters had to hang out at restaurants and drink coffee.)

Stewardess Lucy Lane talks her sister into flying to Hollywood for a role in a training film. But — ha, ha — there is no training film. In fact, it's all been a hoax to get an unsuspecting Lois to the set of This Is Your Life!

This real-life television program, with host Ralph Edwards, used to trick celebrities into appearing in order to honor them. Comic-book characters being so much more forgiving back then, Lois is thrilled. And, with the aide of an amnesia victim, Supes even manages to appear on stage with Clark Kent. Everybody is happy and remains so through a Tootsie Roll ad, a "Cora the Car Hop" page by Henry Boltinoff, a "Coming Super-Attractions," and a public-service announcement about cleaning your room.

Bernstein and Schaffenberger return with "Lois Lane's Stone-Age Suitor," the issue's second story. Clark and Lois are flying home from Mexico when their Daily Planet plane crashes in "a lost world inhabited by prehistoric creatures where evolution stopped." The chief of the valley asks Lois if Clark is her mate, which sets the tale into motion.

"Him?," Lois exclaims, "Definitely not! I wouldn't marry a timid, weak-muscled jellyfish like Clark Kent!"

That turns out to be a bad move for Lois. The chief decrees that she must marry Blog, the least of the cavemen, provided Blog can complete three tasks Lois sets for him. Lois almost gets Blog killed, but Clark, smarting ever so slightly from that jellyfish crack, keeps saving the caveman and helping him complete his tasks. He lets Lois sweat for seven pages before he "finds" a way out of the valley.

Don't feel too bad for Blog, though. His amazing "feats" have made him the most eligible bachelor in the valley. He's got his pick of Schaffenberger-drawn cave-babes.

This story is followed by another Tootsie Roll ad, one for the Clyde Beatty and Cole Bros. circus at Palisades Amusement Park, and a "Letters to Lois" page which reveals that Lois hails from the Midwest and is a direct descendant of Quentin August Lane, who came to the future United States on the Mayflower. In answer to a reader question as to why Lois keeps pestering Clark Kent to find out if he's Superman when he has proven to her many times that he is not, the "editor" responds:

"Did you ever know of a woman who could take "No!" for an answer? Besides, what would our writers do for plots if we eliminated this angle for keeps?"

Now comes the main attraction: "Superman's Mystery Song" by Bernstein and — an artist. I think it's Dick Sprang with some odd inking and a lot of retouching on the faces but I wouldn't want to bet the farm on it.

Here's the set-up: Lois is a big Pat Boone fan. Perry gives Clark the job of writing "A Day in the Life of Pat Boone," because he doesn't want a "thrilled" interview. As the cigar-waving editor says, "Boone's a regular guy! I want an article with no feminine gush! On your way, Clark!"

Back at the Planet, Lois and the gang are rehearsing for the annual office party. Boone is impressed by her voice and decides to use her in his show. He wants to perform something fresh and different with her.

"Wait, I've got it. The whole country knows you're Superman's girl friend! Let's pay tribute to Superman by doing a Superman song!"

An excited Lois volunteers Clark's services as lyricist, and, after a restless night of creativity (or lack thereof), the mild-mannered reporter comes up with:

Come sing a song of Superman!
Low he strikes the Villain's plan!
And though bad men may have their day,
Repeatedly, he makes them pay!
Kryptonite may harm his skill ...
Keeper of the law's his will ...
Eagle-eyed watcher of land, air and sea,
Ne'er does he cease to fight tyranny —
To down men's foes and set men free!

I don't know about you, but my toes are tapping.

For reasons not readily apparent, Boone loves the lyrics. He sets them to music and schedules the song's debut for his next TV show. However, the broadcast is secretly interrupted by Superman, who has decided the song must never be performed.

Two additional acts of sabotage later, Supes reveals to Boone that the song contains a clue to his secret identity. He writes new and harmless lyrics and makes up for his previous mischief by saving Boone's latest song, the master disc of which has been flattened by a steam roller. Superman uses his microscopic vision to see the imprint of the disc's grooves in the asphalt. With his photographic memory, he etches every vibration onto an empty disc.

When an accident at the record factory occurs, Superman uses his super-mechanic powers to reconstruct damaged machinery and, at super-speed, stamps out a million copies. For his big finish, he focuses one beam of x-ray vision to bore a center hole through all of the records.

That's our Superman: patron of the arts!

What's that? You didn't figure out why Superman had to stop the original song from being performed. I'll let Big Blue himself spell it out for you:

"In writing the lyrics subconsciously, I betrayed my secret identity! Reading down the first letter of each line, it spells: Clark Kent!"

As to the much larger question of why Boone thought the lyrics were any good in the first place: Well, obviously, he didn't want to louse up a licensing deal. Just a few months after this story appeared, the singer got his very own DC title.

Yeah, maybe Pat Boone only ran five issues, but it was hardly a total loss. After all, he got to meet Superman.

I'll see you next week.

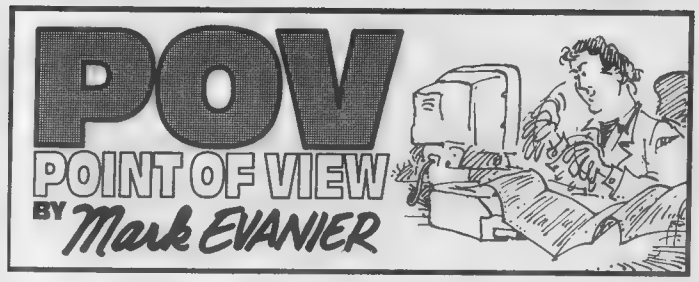
Not Responsible For Typos



"If the Golden Age ended in '51 and the Silver Age started in '56, what does one call those intervening years?"

Superman, as we all know, made his debut in Action Comics #1, which was dated June 1938. That issue not only introduced that American icon, it launched the whole genre of the super-hero.

"Carl Barks did some of his finest work in these years we hold to be neither Golden nor Silver."

And it also started something called the Golden Age of Comics. In the '60s, when I first got involved in fandom, we referred to the '40s as the Golden Age.

Most of the super-hero comics didn't survive that decade. All-Star Comics, which featured The Justice Society of America, converted to cowboys in 1951. I'm not sure who first suggested this event as the dividing line, but it has been generally assumed by everyone that the grand and fabulous Golden Age ended when All-Star went west.

Not that there haven't been a few dissenters. I remember a fan at our old comic-book club — one of our older members — who loudly insisted that the Golden Age of Comics was 1938-1942 and that everything published since was unfit to wipe a baby's buttocks. This we dealt with in our usual rational, mature manner. We hauled him out back and beat him to death.

The guy had it coming. We all knew that the Golden Age of Comics extended until approximately '51, though we were a bit less clear on the beginning and ending dates for its successor, the Silver Age. This was understandable, I think, since it was 1968, and, by most accounts, said age was still in progress or, perhaps, just winding down.

Above: Martian Manhunter — Golden or Silver Age super-hero?

Below: Barry Allen's debut as The Flash is generally considered to be the start of the Silver Age.

We had some notion it had commenced with the debut of the new Flash, first seen in 1956 in Showcase #4. So many fine, successful super-hero comics emerged in its wake — including the entire Marvel line — that some unknown soul took to calling it the Silver Age, and the name stuck.

Still, that start date has always posed certain problems. If the Golden Age ended in '51 and the Silver Age started in '56, what does one call those intervening years? There were some pretty good comics then, including the best of the E.C. comics and the advent of Mad. Seems a little weird to have a Golden Age of Comics and a Silver Age of Comics, both of which exclude what some people consider the best comics ever published. For that matter, Carl Barks did some of his finest work in these years we hold to be neither Golden nor Silver. (Uncle Scrooge got his own comic book in 1952.)

This oversight is easily remedied. Instead of referring to 1938-1951 as "The Golden Age of Comics," we need merely add a couple of words and start calling it "The Golden Age of Super-Hero Comics." That way, we aren't belittling the period of the E.C. comics. In fact, we could start referring to that era as "The Golden Age of Horror, Science-Fiction, War, Crime, and Humor Comics": a bit cumbersome but not inaccurate.

This all seems like a fine solution, but we still have a couple of problems, not the least of which is The Martian Manhunter.

John Jones, aka J'onn J'onzz, aka The M.M., was a charter member of The Justice League of America. Whatever the Silver Age was, The Justice League was at its nexus. The charter members of the Justice League (1960) were Superman, Batman, Wonder Woman, Flash, Green Lantern, Aquaman, and The Martian Manhunter.

Now Superman, Batman, Wonder Woman, and Aquaman were all Golden Age characters who had been published continuously since then. So was Green Arrow, who signed on in #4. They were mighty enough to transcend the boundaries of Golden/Silver Age. The versions of Flash and Green Lantern in The JLA were indisputably Silver Age heroes, having started during that period. So were the new incarnations of Atom and Hawkman, who joined a bit later.

But The Martian Manhunter made his debut in the rear of Detective Comics in 1955, which means he came along after the Golden Age ended and before the Silver Age started. This has proven most unsettling to some fans who like their eras neatly charted and defined. When they make up lists of Golden Age heroes and Silver Age heroes, they have no idea where to put ol' J'onn.

Some have been known to attempt a bit of sleight-of-era; they try moving the end date of the Golden Age to 1955, thereby declaring The Martian Manhunter the last of the GA heroes. Of course, if you do that, the Golden Age ends in 1955 and the Silver Age starts in 1956: kind of a pointless distinction.

Others try declaring Mr. J'onzz the first of the Silver Age heroes, bumping the start of that hallowed period to '55. This works at first peek, but, if you actually read those early John Jones strips, it feels wrong. The Silver Age supposedly represented a new kind of comic book. That newness appears nowhere in the back of Detective Comics, where the stories were of a piece with the Golden — not Silver — Age super-hero comics. (For that matter, the front of Detective Comics — the part inhabited by Batman — didn't show any trace of any new era until 1962.)

To further complicate this, there are those who lobby for Fantastic Four #1 (1961) as the start of the Silver Age. So what do I think? I think I don't have a firm opinion on this. 1955 ... 1956 ... 1961 ... any of those is fine by me. As for the end of the Silver Age, there are a number of milestones that might mark the finish line —

In 1967, DC Comics was sold to a corporation called Kinney Services. What with subsequent acquisitions and takeovers, it eventually all turned into Time-Warner, which owns it today.

In 1968, Marvel Comics was sold to the Perfect Film and Chemical Corporation. What with subsequent purchases and reorganizations, Marvel is now owned by ... uh ... I'm actually not sure who owns Marvel today. What time is it?

In 1970, Jack Kirby, the artistic mainstay of Marvel's rebirth, left that company for a berth at DC. Also that year, Denny O'Neil and Neal Adams revamped the Green Lantern comic book into Green Lantern-Green Arrow for DC, while Roy Thomas and Barry Smith launched Conan the Barbarian at Marvel. Kirby's migration clearly marked the end of some era, perhaps the Silver one, and the two named comics signaled new and radical concepts of what a comic book could or should be.

You could make a good case for any of those years. The corporate buy-ups changed the foundations on which comic-book companies were built. And, while some interesting creative changes occurred prior to '70, that always struck me as the year after which no comic book was the same as it had been before. Suddenly, for good or ill, everything was different.

So, if you forced me to name years — and no one has, but I will, anyway — I'd say the Golden Age of Super-Hero Comics was 1938-1951. You have to remember to include the "super-hero" qualifier in there. And I'd say the Silver Age was roughly 1956-1970. And if someone asked about The Martian Manhunter, I think I'd just change the subject and try to distract him.

And after that?

After that, I don't know that there is an Age. I've heard folks talk about Bronze and Tin and Platinum, while the best-selling comics of some years have caused a few to suggest we were in the Age of Plastic or some really cheesy, biodegradable material. Since 1970, there have been many wonderful comics — some, in their way, as good as or better than those before — but it somehow doesn't feel right to declare any grouping of those years as an "age."

But, then, I also think that my opinion on this may be even less meaningful than my opinion on anything else, which would make it pretty darn meaningless. I got into comics in 1970. (That may have been what killed the Silver Age right there: me getting into comics.)

I think that kind of grand overview — when we're in another "age," when there is a great and lasting burst of communal creativity — has to be made by someone with no dog in the hunt. It requires distance from the industry and, perhaps, a hefty serving of hindsight. Certainly, it was many years after the Silver Age ended that some of us figured out that, whatever it was, it was over.

Perhaps decades from now, when Ken Starr III starts to wind down the Whitewater Investigation or the Boulder police locate the Ramsey house, we'll know. Someone will look back at previous years and say, "The Magnesium Age? Oh, sure, that started when Marvel launched a comic book chronicling the pre-natal adventures of The X-Men, and it ended when Frank Miller took to decorating his pages with The Bedazzler."

Or, "The Aluminum Age? That started when DC went three whole months without killing one of their major characters, and it ended when Gary Groth began including

"Next to standing in front of an altar with Superman, Lois Lane's wildest dream is to share a microphone with America's top singing star and idol of millions, Pat Boone!"

— "Superman's Mystery Song," Lois Lane #9 (May 1959)

"Can you name any other middle-aged-plus Christian performers who can see the humor in singing heavy-metal songs while wearing chains and leather?"

Might as well slap a big old Spoiler Warning across this entire column, because, in the interest of literary scholarship, I will be revealing the endings of the three stories featured in Lois Lane #9. It cost a thin dime back in 1959, but today a fine copy goes for around $25 and a near-mint copy will set you back $250 or more. That's why they call it the Silver Age.

I chose to write about this comic book because it actually fits this week's theme of music in comics and because I admire Pat Boone. Can you name any other middle-aged-plus Christian performers who can see the humor in singing heavy-metal songs while wearing chains and leather?

The Curt Swan cover for this issue was one of many delightfully bizarre ideas that were launched from the editorial offices of the late Mort Weisinger. Superman flies into frame to see Lois and Pat singing a duet. He says:

"Pat Boone and Lois Lane are singing a new song about me! It's a great tune, but I must use all my super-powers to prevent it from becoming a hit!"

With such a cover, the 1959 reader knew the story would be the closing act of the issue. So, like Uncle Mortie, I'm going to keep you in suspense a while longer.

"The Most Hated Girl in Metropolis" by writer Robert Bernstein and artist Kurt Schaffenberger leads off the issue. The tale falls into the "Superman and/or his friends commit acts of unspeakable cruelty toward each other" category, something that happened so many times in Weisinger-edited comics that it must be considered a subgenre.

Lois wakes up on a glorious morning and the day goes to heck after that. Jimmy Olsen calls her a rat. Clark Kent tells her what she did was despicable. Perry White fires her.

What did she do? She revealed Superman's secret identity as Clark Kent to the world in a front-page story. Oh, sure, she never meant to release the story. It was something she'd written a year earlier and then discarded for lack of evidence. But there it was, gone directly from her desk drawer to print without, apparently, ever being edited. Perry stopped the presses, but a few copies of the paper got out anyway. Lois has betrayed Superman for the sake of a scoop. She is even driven from "a restaurant frequented by Planet reporters" for her treachery. Her life in Metropolis is over.

(Digression. Believe it or not, there were no bars in 1959. That is why the Planet reporters had to hang out at restaurants and drink coffee.)

Stewardess Lucy Lane talks her sister into flying to Hollywood for a role in a training film. But — ha, ha — there is no training film. In fact, it's all been a hoax to get an unsuspecting Lois to the set of This Is Your Life!

This real-life television program, with host Ralph Edwards, used to trick celebrities into appearing in order to honor them. Comic-book characters being so much more forgiving back then, Lois is thrilled. And, with the aide of an amnesia victim, Supes even manages to appear on stage with Clark Kent. Everybody is happy and remains so through a Tootsie Roll ad, a "Cora the Car Hop" page by Henry Boltinoff, a "Coming Super-Attractions," and a public-service announcement about cleaning your room.

Bernstein and Schaffenberger return with "Lois Lane's Stone-Age Suitor," the issue's second story. Clark and Lois are flying home from Mexico when their Daily Planet plane crashes in "a lost world inhabited by prehistoric creatures where evolution stopped." The chief of the valley asks Lois if Clark is her mate, which sets the tale into motion.

"Him?," Lois exclaims, "Definitely not! I wouldn't marry a timid, weak-muscled jellyfish like Clark Kent!"

That turns out to be a bad move for Lois. The chief decrees that she must marry Blog, the least of the cavemen, provided Blog can complete three tasks Lois sets for him. Lois almost gets Blog killed, but Clark, smarting ever so slightly from that jellyfish crack, keeps saving the caveman and helping him complete his tasks. He lets Lois sweat for seven pages before he "finds" a way out of the valley.

Don't feel too bad for Blog, though. His amazing "feats" have made him the most eligible bachelor in the valley. He's got his pick of Schaffenberger-drawn cave-babes.

This story is followed by another Tootsie Roll ad, one for the Clyde Beatty and Cole Bros. circus at Palisades Amusement Park, and a "Letters to Lois" page which reveals that Lois hails from the Midwest and is a direct descendant of Quentin August Lane, who came to the future United States on the Mayflower. In answer to a reader question as to why Lois keeps pestering Clark Kent to find out if he's Superman when he has proven to her many times that he is not, the "editor" responds:

"Did you ever know of a woman who could take "No!" for an answer? Besides, what would our writers do for plots if we eliminated this angle for keeps?"

Now comes the main attraction: "Superman's Mystery Song" by Bernstein and — an artist. I think it's Dick Sprang with some odd inking and a lot of retouching on the faces but I wouldn't want to bet the farm on it.

Here's the set-up: Lois is a big Pat Boone fan. Perry gives Clark the job of writing "A Day in the Life of Pat Boone," because he doesn't want a "thrilled" interview. As the cigar-waving editor says, "Boone's a regular guy! I want an article with no feminine gush! On your way, Clark!"

Back at the Planet, Lois and the gang are rehearsing for the annual office party. Boone is impressed by her voice and decides to use her in his show. He wants to perform something fresh and different with her.

"Wait, I've got it. The whole country knows you're Superman's girl friend! Let's pay tribute to Superman by doing a Superman song!"

An excited Lois volunteers Clark's services as lyricist, and, after a restless night of creativity (or lack thereof), the mild-mannered reporter comes up with:

Come sing a song of Superman!
Low he strikes the Villain's plan!
And though bad men may have their day,
Repeatedly, he makes them pay!
Kryptonite may harm his skill ...
Keeper of the law's his will ...
Eagle-eyed watcher of land, air and sea,
Ne'er does he cease to fight tyranny —
To down men's foes and set men free!

I don't know about you, but my toes are tapping.

For reasons not readily apparent, Boone loves the lyrics. He sets them to music and schedules the song's debut for his next TV show. However, the broadcast is secretly interrupted by Superman, who has decided the song must never be performed.

Two additional acts of sabotage later, Supes reveals to Boone that the song contains a clue to his secret identity. He writes new and harmless lyrics and makes up for his previous mischief by saving Boone's latest song, the master disc of which has been flattened by a steam roller. Superman uses his microscopic vision to see the imprint of the disc's grooves in the asphalt. With his photographic memory, he etches every vibration onto an empty disc.

When an accident at the record factory occurs, Superman uses his super-mechanic powers to reconstruct damaged machinery and, at super-speed, stamps out a million copies. For his big finish, he focuses one beam of x-ray vision to bore a center hole through all of the records.

That's our Superman: patron of the arts!

What's that? You didn't figure out why Superman had to stop the original song from being performed. I'll let Big Blue himself spell it out for you:

"In writing the lyrics subconsciously, I betrayed my secret identity! Reading down the first letter of each line, it spells: Clark Kent!"

As to the much larger question of why Boone thought the lyrics were any good in the first place: Well, obviously, he didn't want to louse up a licensing deal. Just a few months after this story appeared, the singer got his very own DC title.

Yeah, maybe Pat Boone only ran five issues, but it was hardly a total loss. After all, he got to meet Superman.

I'll see you next week.

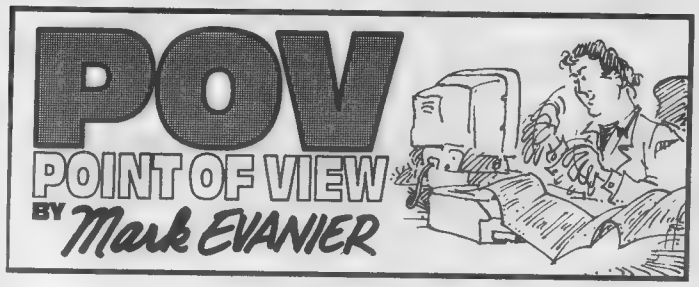
Not Responsible For Typos



"If the Golden Age ended in '51 and the Silver Age started in '56, what does one call those intervening years?"

Superman, as we all know, made his debut in Action Comics #1, which was dated June 1938. That issue not only introduced that American icon, it launched the whole genre of the super-hero.

"Carl Barks did some of his finest work in these years we hold to be neither Golden nor Silver."

And it also started something called the Golden Age of Comics. In the '60s, when I first got involved in fandom, we referred to the '40s as the Golden Age.

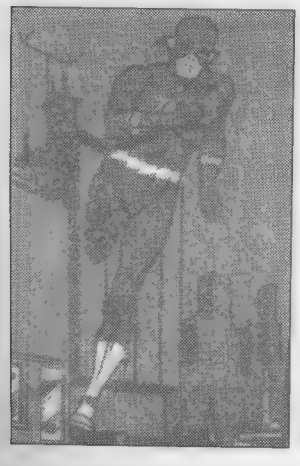
Most of the super-hero comics didn't survive that decade. All-Star Comics, which featured The Justice Society of America, converted to cowboys in 1951. I'm not sure who first suggested this event as the dividing line, but it has been generally assumed by everyone that the grand and fabulous Golden Age ended when All-Star went west.

Not that there haven't been a few dissenters. I remember a fan at our old comic-book club — one of our older members — who loudly insisted that the Golden Age of Comics was 1938-1942 and that everything published since was unfit to wipe a baby's buttocks. This we dealt with in our usual rational, mature manner. We hauled him out back and beat him to death.

The guy had it coming. We all knew that the Golden Age of Comics extended until approximately '51, though we were a bit less clear on the beginning and ending dates for its successor, the Silver Age. This was understandable, I think, since it was 1968, and, by most accounts, said age was still in progress or, perhaps, just winding down.

Above: Martian Manhunter — Golden or Silver Age super-hero?

Below: Barry Allen's debut as The Flash is generally considered to be the start of the Silver Age.



We had some notion it had commenced with the debut of the new Flash, first seen in 1956 in Showcase #4. So many fine, successful super-hero comics emerged in its wake — including the entire Marvel line — that some unknown soul took to calling it the Silver Age, and the name stuck.

Still, that start date has always posed certain problems. If the Golden Age ended in '51 and the Silver Age started in '56, what does one call those intervening years? There were some pretty good comics then, including the best of the E.C. comics and the advent of Mad. Seems a little weird to have a Golden Age of Comics and a Silver Age of Comics, both of which exclude what some people consider the best comics ever published. For that matter, Carl Barks did some of his finest work in these years we hold to be neither Golden nor Silver. (Uncle Scrooge got his own comic book in 1952.)

This oversight is easily remedied. Instead of referring to 1938-1951 as "The Golden Age of Comics," we need merely add a couple of words and start calling it "The Golden Age of Super-Hero Comics." That way, we aren't belittling the period of the E.C. comics. In fact, we could start referring to that era as "The Golden Age of Horror, Science-Fiction, War, Crime, and Humor Comics": a bit cumbersome but not inaccurate.

This all seems like a fine solution, but we still have a couple of problems, not the least of which is The Martian Manhunter.

John Jones, aka J'onn J'onzz, aka The M.M., was a charter member of The Justice League of America. Whatever the Silver Age was, The Justice League was at its nexus. The charter members of the Justice League (1960) were Superman, Batman, Wonder Woman, Flash, Green Lantern, Aquaman, and The Martian Manhunter.

Now Superman, Batman, Wonder Woman, and Aquaman were all Golden Age characters who had been published continuously since then. So was Green Arrow, who signed on in #4. They were mighty enough to transcend the boundaries of Golden/Silver Age. The versions of Flash and Green Lantern in The JLA were indisputably Silver Age heroes, having started during that period. So were the new incarnations of Atom and Hawkman, who joined a bit later.

But The Martian Manhunter made his debut in the rear of Detective Comics in 1955, which means he came along after the Golden Age ended and before the Silver Age started. This has proven most unsettling to some fans who like their eras neatly charted and defined. When they make up lists of Golden Age heroes and Silver Age heroes, they have no idea where to put ol' J'onn.

Some have been known to attempt a bit of sleight-of-era; they try moving the end date of the Golden Age to 1955, thereby declaring The Martian Manhunter the last of the GA heroes. Of course, if you do that, the Golden Age ends in 1955 and the Silver Age starts in 1956: kind of a pointless distinction.

Others try declaring Mr. J'onzz the first of the Silver Age heroes, bumping the start of that hallowed period to '55. This works at first peek, but, if you actually read those early John Jones strips, it feels wrong. The Silver Age supposedly represented a new kind of comic book. That newness appears nowhere in the back of Detective Comics, where the stories were of a piece with the Golden — not Silver — Age super-hero comics. (For that matter, the front of Detective Comics — the part inhabited by Batman — didn't show any trace of any new era until 1962.)

To further complicate this, there are those who lobby for Fantastic Four #1 (1961) as the start of the Silver Age. So what do I think? I think I don't have a firm opinion on this. 1955 ... 1956 ... 1961 ... any of those is fine by me. As for the end of the Silver Age, there are a number of milestones that might mark the finish line —

In 1967, DC Comics was sold to a corporation called Kinney Services. What with subsequent acquisitions and takeovers, it eventually all turned into Time-Warner, which owns it today.

In 1968, Marvel Comics was sold to the Perfect Film and Chemical Corporation. What with subsequent purchases and reorganizations, Marvel is now owned by ... uh ... I'm actually not sure who owns Marvel today. What time is it?

In 1970, Jack Kirby, the artistic mainstay of Marvel's rebirth, left that company for a berth at DC. Also that year, Denny O'Neil and Neal Adams revamped the Green Lantern comic book into Green Lantern-Green Arrow for DC, while Roy Thomas and Barry Smith launched Conan the Barbarian at Marvel. Kirby's migration clearly marked the end of some era, perhaps the Silver one, and the two named comics signaled new and radical concepts of what a comic book could or should be.

You could make a good case for any of those years. The corporate buy-ups changed the foundations on which comic-book companies were built. And, while some interesting creative changes occurred prior to '70, that always struck me as the year after which no comic book was the same as it had been before. Suddenly, for good or ill, everything was different.

So, if you forced me to name years — and no one has, but I will, anyway — I'd say the Golden Age of Super-Hero Comics was 1938-1951. You have to remember to include the "super-hero" qualifier in there. And I'd say the Silver Age was roughly 1956-1970. And if someone asked about The Martian Manhunter, I think I'd just change the subject and try to distract him.

And after that?

After that, I don't know that there is an Age. I've heard folks talk about Bronze and Tin and Platinum, while the best-selling comics of some years have caused a few to suggest we were in the Age of Plastic or some really cheesy, biodegradable material. Since 1970, there have been many wonderful comics — some, in their way, as good as or better than those before — but it somehow doesn't feel right to declare any grouping of those years as an "age."

But, then, I also think that my opinion on this may be even less meaningful than my opinion on anything else, which would make it pretty darn meaningless. I got into comics in 1970. (That may have been what killed the Silver Age right there: me getting into comics.)

I think that kind of grand overview — when we're in another "age," when there is a great and lasting burst of communal creativity — has to be made by someone with no dog in the hunt. It requires distance from the industry and, perhaps, a hefty serving of hindsight. Certainly, it was many years after the Silver Age ended that some of us figured out that, whatever it was, it was over.

Perhaps decades from now, when Ken Starr III starts to wind down the Whitewater Investigation or the Boulder police locate the Ramsey house, we'll know. Someone will look back at previous years and say, "The Magnesium Age? Oh, sure, that started when Marvel launched a comic book chronicling the pre-natal adventures of The X-Men, and it ended when Frank Miller took to decorating his pages with The Bedazzler."

Or, "The Aluminum Age? That started when DC went three whole months without killing one of their major characters, and it ended when Gary Groth began including a free sample of Viagra with every Eros Comic."

Point of View

Or, "The Styrofoam Age? That started when Dannon Yogurt got into funnybook publishing and began printing comics with fruit at the bottom, and it ended when Metron of the New Gods went on the Jerry Springer Show and started hitting the other guests with his Moebius Chair."

I'm sorry if this is getting weird, people. This column was prompted by a fevered Internet debate I recently witnessed, all about when the Golden Age ended, when the Silver Age started, etc. I've heard this argued as long as I've been in fandom and I thought I could offer some earnest thoughts on the matter. Turns out I can't. The more I write about it, the more I feel my Silly-Sense tingling. (Silly-Sense works just like Peter Parker's Spider-Sense, only it goes off whenever silliness lurks nearby. I have it, you have it, everyone has it — though some people are too danged serious to listen to theirs.)

Those dates I gave earlier: I think they're all valid. What I haven't figured out is why we need to refer to certain years as our Golden Age or our Silver Age, as if everything published during those periods was sparkling. I see a lot of pretty awful comics on the racks today — but, back in the Silver Age, we had Mighty Comics. And the Dell super-hero version of Frankenstein. And Tod Holton, Super Green Beret. Good heavens.

I just called up a writer friend and read him everything before this paragraph to get his reaction. He's my age and he leapt to defend the comics of his childhood. He said, "Yeah, but the good stuff was good."

Well, duh. The good stuff is always good. That's why it's good stuff.

"No, no," he said. "There was more of it when we were kids. Everything was so fresh and new and exciting."

More of it then? Probably. Fresh, new and exciting? I dunno about that part. The first time you read comics, everything is fresh, new, and exciting. Even the Kirby imitators can look pretty good to someone who's never seen Kirby. I once heard someone say, "The Golden Age of Comics is whenever you're nine."

That's an excellent way of looking at it. That's better than anything I came up with in the first part of this article. And when I remembered it just now, my Silly-Sense didn't prickle one bit, and a thought occurred to me about why we adopted terms like "Golden Age" and "Silver Age." I think they were just discreet ways of saying, "Comics were better when I was a kid."

Now I happen to think comics were better when I was a kid. But I also think some of that was because I was a kid. It's important to be aware of that and to not get pushy about this Golden Age thing. There is some consensus that the comics of certain years were very special, but your Golden Age of Comics is whenever the comics are special to you.

Hmm ... maybe we shouldn't have killed that guy back at the comics club. Oh, well. Too late now.

We did it again. We bought yet another 100 000 book inventory with no propects of cataloguing it until we get through our current, already overwhelming schedule of updates. ORDERING IS SIMPLE you want SPECTRE 1-50, WEB 1-200, Superman 420-500, Jon Sable 1-50? or selected issues of any of these such as Web 12,17,52,56,57 etc)? Just list & count 'em at $1.00 , and you're on your way. Yes we have pulled some of the more expensive books and our regular customers have been hacking away for a month already so, it is not recommended that you base an order on break outs & higher price books. But the vast majority of Marvels, DC, & Indies from 1982 & up are available (incl many books with guide values of $5.00-$10.00) for you to order at fine or better at a buck a book.. , Alternates are recommended & REQUIRED for ...

Trader Tips

The Trader ads in CBG are an easy and economical way to advertise. Simply design your ad in a space that is 8½" wide by 8½" high and send it along with payment ($41.00 per Trader space) and complete reference form to:

COMICS BUYER'S GUIDE
Advertising Department
700 E. State Street
Iola, WI 54990-0001

We'll reduce your ad to the proper size and place it in the issue(s) you request. If no specific issue(s) is requested, we'll run your ad in the next available issue.

Keep in mind that CBG does not typeset, screen photos, add logos, artwork or symbols to Trader ads. The better your ad looks when you send it to us, the better it will look when it is reduced and published in CBG.

But I Digress

He didn't appear to have heard me. "And they've got Godzilla dodging missiles. Why would he dodge them? He'd never seen them before. Why wouldn't he swat at them or try to eat them? See, that's the original Godzilla, my Godzilla. He could take whatever was thrown at him. This one has to get out of everything's way. And what was the deal with the size? He's supposed to be gigantic, people are like insects next to his feet — and then he hides in a subway tunnel? I mean, c'mon! He wanted an island to nest on? What's wrong with Australia?"

"Well, that's a continent ..."

"Who cares? It's a damned sight bigger than Manhattan! And if you're going to have it in New York City, at least get your geography right! Since when is the Brooklyn Bridge the closest suspension bridge to the Park Avenue underpass? The Queensboro's only 20 blocks away! They couldn't crack a map? And the mayor and his aide looking and talking like Siskel and Ebert — what the hell was up with that?"

"Probably it was Dean Devlin and Roland Emmerich taking a potshot at ..."

"You know the big difference between this thing and Independence Day? In ID4, there was nothing interesting or original going on, but there was so much uninteresting and unoriginal stuff going on that it distracted you from it. And all the plot and visual elements that they ripped off were from old films that the average teen-ager didn't have any recent memory of, like War of the Worlds and even Star Wars. But all that stuff in Godzilla smacked of Jurassic Park, so there wasn't anything new and novel visually to grab you. And, while ID4 was a tangle of plot lines and various cardboard characters, this only had a handful of cardboard characters. It was a 'smaller' story. The problem is when something is smaller it makes you look closer, and, once you look closely at Godzilla, you realize that there's nothin' there. So I guess size really does matter — or at least quantity," and he snorted.

He was silent for a moment.

Then he looked up at me and I saw there were cold tears of anger trickling down his face. "I met with them."

"Who?"

"Emmerich and Devlin. I took a meeting with them, a year or so ago. It was humiliating. They laughed at me — and then they swiped my suggestions! I was the one who suggested that they work the Gojira/Godzilla mistranslation thing in. Do you know what their original script had a newscaster say? 'God, that's a big zilla!' That's where his name came from!

"And the whole thing with the baby Godzillas? My idea! I even heard people in the audience today, when the babies show up, saying, 'Look! Godzooky!' It tore my heart out. OK, I admit it, I came up with the idea as a way of getting myself in the film. Can you blame me? I could be doing Shakespeare in the park, but I'm typecast as a small winged dinosaur! No one believes I have any range! This was going to be my big comeback film!

"And not only did they give me the bum's rush and steal my concept without so much as a lousy screen credit, but then they taunt me by sticking a Barney cameo in the background, because they know how sensitive I am about it!" He leaned over and shouted into my tape recorder, "Roland! Dean! Your pasty-white butts are mine, buddy boys! Mine!"

And then, in a burst of rage, Godzooky tore out of the restaurant, went to a local mall, and stampeded through a model Lego City, as Japanese tourists pointed and laughed.

It was pretty sad. Definitely an A-ticket attraction.

The forwarding of an order is construed as acceptance of all rates and conditions in effect at the time the advertising is submitted. The publisher will not be bound by any conditions, printed or otherwise, appearing on any order for advertising space, billing instructions or copy instructions which conflict with its policies. Advertisers and advertising agencies assume liability for all content (including text representation and illustrations) of advertisements printed, and also assumes responsibility of any claims arising therefrom made against the publisher. It is the advertiser's or agency's responsibility to obtain appropriate releases on any item or individual pictured in their advertising. An A-ticket ride? You bet!

[Spoiler Warning: In the following column, Peter reviews Godzilla. As he writes, "Although I don't discuss anything that hasn't already been widely reported in Entertainment Weekly, Newsweek, or Premiere, the film's own trailers, etc., you might want to stick spoiler warnings on it." So we have.]

Siren: Shapes #1 (of 3) (May 98, Image, $2.95) is a black-and-white written by J. Torres and drawn by Tim Levins and Jeff Wasson. It's one of the series "facilitated" by Jim Valentino — and is a prime example of what is so fun about Valentino's project. Readers benefit from increased chance of exposure to a variety of comics "worlds" they'd never have noticed from a small black-and-white imprint.

Siren is a delightful mix of fantasy and noir detective work, a female detective, and a fantasy universe. Zara Rush's case is a runaway teenage boy. Since taking over her father's agency, she's dealt with "banshees, witches, aliens from outer space ... not to mention vampires." So a runaway shouldn't be too hard — except that he's a shape-changer. The script is sprightly, the characters likeable, the environment a bit loony, the story appropriate for everyone from early teens on up. Would make a fun movie someday.

In considering Godzilla, I've decided that — rather than depend upon my own opinions — I'm going to fall back on the experts. See what they have to say.

First: professional movie reviewer Mark McEwen.

In a full-page ad for Godzilla, McEwen of CBS This Morning is quoted. It's an opinion that the marketing folks were so proud of that it leads off the ad without a sense of irony. McEwen's pull-quoted description of the movie was:

"The A-Ticket Ride of the Summer!"

Now — Let's think about this.

Once upon a time, decades ago, I believe, when you went to Disneyland and/or DisneyWorld, the park was studded with little booths from which you could purchase ride tickets. These tickets ranged in lettering from A to E. You could purchase them singly or as books.

E tickets were the most expensive, the top-drawer rides, such as Space Mountain. To this day, the term "That's an E-ticket attraction" refers to something that is top-of-the-line, even though letter tickets have long since been replaced by all-inclusive passes.

A-tickets, on the other hand: They were the ones that most people had in the largest quantity. There were the most of them in a book because they were the cheapest, the least interesting rides — the stuff that no adult had any real hankering to see.

(Granted, it's possible to make even the most feeble ride seem interesting. Paul Dini and I once went on "Snow White's Scary Adventure" when there was no one else around and amused ourselves by screaming in blood-curdling terror at everything we encountered, no matter what it was. Little singing birds, the Dwarfs, everything elicited deafening howls of fear. We got very strange looks from the attendants upon emerging. But I digress ...)

In short, A-ticket rides were for the most part the kiddie rides, the stuff that parents took the little ones on while the teen-agers went on the cooler stuff.

McEwen may not have meant it as such, but he pretty much nailed it. It's a film that adults can bring their children to, content in the knowledge that the kids will find it interesting and there's some modicum of visual stimulation to engage the adult's interest. However, much like the Disneyland Carousel, it goes around and around with no particular purpose to it.

Whom to talk to next?

Well, I spoke to my kids. Ariel, age 6, and Gwen, age 13, accompanied me to the showing.

Before the film started, Ariel asked me her usual question: "Is this a true story?" It's the reason (well, one of many reasons) that I haven't let her see Titanic despite her pleadings. (Her sisters saw it, and that's usually enough incentive.) Ariel's a pretty movie-savvy kid, more interested in the technical aspects of film production than anything else, although she is able to zero in on story holes fairly quickly. Titanic is about real events, real deaths, and a real tragedy. Having a child see a film in which children die is problematic enough; when it's based on a true story, it's too much. But Godzilla: Well, I didn't anticipate any real difficulties.

Ariel wanted to see the film just by hearing about it second-hand. When I asked her what she thought it was going to be about, she said, "A big gorilla." I explained, no, that was King Kong. This was about a giant dinosaur. "Oh, like Reptar," she said, referring to the dinosaur character worshipped by Nickelodeon's Rugrats — a character who is, visually, based on Godzilla. "Yeah, just like," I said, without bothering to explain which came first.

About three-quarters of the way through Godzilla, Ariel dozed off. This was, as they say, not a good sign. She came to about 15 minutes later, apparently none the worse for wear and oblivious to the fact that she had missed any of what was nominally the plot. She jumped several times, covering not her eyes but her ears, since she found Godzilla's roar to be nothing short of deafening.

Gwen sat and watched with polite interest. Later, I spoke to them to find out what they thought of the entertainment.

"It was scary," opined Ariel. Scarier than Jurassic Park? "Yes. But not scarier than Jurassic Park II," she quickly added. She found a sequence involving scads of several hundred hungry baby Godzillas to be far more daunting to her than anything focusing on Godzilla himself.

Inkworks' Godzilla movie cards were released May 20.

Gwen was more acerbic. "No one died," she said. When I pointed out that a brace of soldiers and assorted Japanese sailors had bitten the big one, she amended, "No one interesting died."

"Was there, in fact, anyone interesting?" I asked. "Did you care whether any of the characters lived or died?"

"Not especially, no."

"So you weren't worried about them."

She shrugged. "A bunch of people being chased by computer thingies. Who cares?"

That might be the most incisive comment since "The A-ticket ride of the summer."

However, while seeing the film with my daughters, I noticed someone in the back of the theater, sitting quietly and watching without comment. I couldn't believe my luck. Who would have thought that, in a theater in Long Island, one of the foremost experts on Godzilla was viewing the film while huddling unnoticed in the rear of the theater. Before the lights came up, I hurried to the back and sat down in the seat next to him. He glanced at me suspiciously but didn't say anything.

"Forgive me for bothering you," I whispered, "but aren't you Godzooky?"

He didn't answer at first, just pulled his trenchcoat more tightly around himself. But, when he realized I wasn't going away, he nodded.

The years had not been kind to Godzooky. He had aged but he hadn't grown, kind of like a reptilian Gary Coleman. His skin was darker green, and there seemed to be resentment burning in his eyes.

"Can I talk to you about your feelings on the movie?"

He hesitated a moment, then nodded again. After taking the girls home, I circled back, and we met at a sushi place.

I had thought it might be difficult to get Godzooky to open up. I could not have been more wrong. Two beers and I couldn't shut him up.

Godzooky had not been getting much work since his heyday in the Godzilla animated series. He'd done a few gigs here and there, it turned out, and was in a few crowd scenes in Jurassic Park. Mostly, he seemed bitter.

"Barney was supposed to be my show," he complained. "I did early development work on that. It was my idea, except it was a vehicle for me. Then, at the last minute, we couldn't come to terms on residuals. My agent recommended I walk as a negotiating ploy. I walked, they cast some guy in a costume, the rest is history. That was the end of my agent, of course."

"You fired him?" I asked.

He looked at me with dark, pitiless eyes. "Oookay," he said simply.

Quickly, we moved on to the main topic at hand. "I knew Godzilla," Godzooky said, slurring his words slightly. "I worked with Godzilla. That," and he raised a winged arm, his voice getting louder, "was not Godzilla." Despite his volume, no one seemed to pay him much attention. Apparently, they knew him there. "That was their big mistake, you know. When they were promoting Independence Day, they showed all the main visuals. With Godzilla, they kept everything secret. So audiences who knew what Godzilla looked like — and that's pretty much everybody — had no time to adjust. They looked at that — CGI thing — and immediately said, 'That's not right.'"

"What did you think of the story?"

"Typical plot holes you could drive a 200-foot dino through. Like when the heat-seeking missiles couldn't lock onto Godzilla because he was too cold. Too cold? Five minutes earlier, he was breathing fire, for cryin' out loud. How cold could he be ?"

"Well, it's possible that it was a chemical fire, caused by Godzilla's breath interacting with another gas causing the ..."
